A 36-year-old Californian has been arrested after an investigation into an international black market baby-selling operation that used a dummy office in Vancouver to channel its operations between Europe and the U.S.

Richard Orser was arrested by Palo Alto police Friday on information that a baby was about to be delivered from Palo Alto to a Texas couple at a pre-arranged location in Vancouver.

Other arrests may follow as state and local authorities continue the investigation into the activities of an adoption group, Familie. The probe was initiated four months ago by the B.C. human resources ministry.

Pat Murray, deputy superintendent of child welfare in B.C., said in an interview today the group tried to lure pregnant women who didn't want abortions to Vancouver from Tunisia, Algeria, Ireland and Italy.

She said the group promised to pay all the women's expenses and provide good adoption homes for their children.

The cost to prospective buyers has been put as high as $17,500.

Murray said she didn't know if any sales had been completed.

"I think they were suffering from a lack of babies," she said. "They only had one we know of — an Indiana baby who was offered to 60 people."

She said she became aware of the group's existence nearly two years ago after ads appeared in newspapers in Ireland and Italy inviting pregnant women to come to North America to have their babies.

The ads were placed by Familie which had an office then on Hastings Street.

Murray said suspicions were raised then but there was no evidence of wrongdoing that would warrant an investigation.

In January, however, Murray said social workers at adoption agencies in Vancouver began to get phone calls from persons throughout the U.S. and Toronto inquiring about Familie.

She estimated the ministry has received 75 such inquiries.

Murray said the group advertised its services with social agencies throughout North America and ran ads in newspapers. One appeared in the Voice of Italy, published in Vancouver earlier this year.

The group's literature gave the names of Stig Hansen as director of foreign programs and Kathy Ganas as assistant director, Murray said.

It also said Familie was a licensed adoption agency in B.C.

But Murray said that was not so.

She and a human resources investigator in February went to the Familie office which had moved to Granville Street.

They found it was just a mail-forwarding address, and that the mail was sent to an address in Palo Alto. None of the staff had ever heard of Hansen or Ganas.

Murray said she wrote to Hansen requesting a meeting.

Ganas replied on March 26 saying the group was still in the process of setting up its standards and hadn't completed any adoptions. Hansen had gone to Denmark and a meeting couldn't be arranged at that time.

Murray said the investigation involved U.S. and Canadian immigration officials, the FBI and other police forces and several social services departments.

The break in the case came last week when one of the adopting parents agreed to co-operate with the authorities.

ICBC turns super-sleuth

VANCOUVER (CP) — Surveillance techniques used by Insurance Corp. of B.C. investigators to check the credibility of claimants would garner the respect of any self-respecting secret service.

ICBC says it employs gadget-laden private investigation firms to spy on claimants it feels may be faking an injury.

An individual can be secretly filmed carrying out his daily activities, or have his conversation recorded from half a block away.

Friends, neighbors, employers, family doctors — all are resources to the investigator to be pumped for information about a claimant.

Don Sandberg, manager of ICBC's special investigation unit and a former RCMP officer, says: "My department, because we are all ex-RCMP and because we do have certain security clearances, we are able to obtain information."

A person's house can be watched from a neighbour's yard, or a van with two-way glass. One investigator says his firm has variously used moving vans, ice cream carts, a 10-speed bike and even a skate-board to keep someone under surveillance.

Aircraft and boats can also be brought into play if needed.

One lawyer suspects banks will sometimes yield private information to claimant investigators, such as accounts and balances.

"Through charge card information they can find out if you charged a meal at a restaurant on a day you claimed to be sick in bed," he said.

And, say lawyers, because ICBC is regarded as a government department other agencies will pass on information freely.

Thus, treatment records from hospitals or medical insurance plans, birth or marriage certificates can all be obtained by investigators, say the lawyers.

ICBC says it has conducted surreptitious filming — which it terms "candid" photography — of 25 to 30 claimants a month.

But the Crown corporation denies it engages in entrapment, saying this was banned 2½ years ago.

RCMP officer jailed

Constable Grant Bottrell of the Sidney RCMP was sentenced in county court Friday to three months in jail for beating a man he had arrested May 1 last year.

Judge Leslie Cashman was told the 29-year-old officer, who has 10 years' service, would be discharged from the force, but this will be delayed pending an appeal.

Bottrell was found guilty by a jury March 30 of two counts of assault causing bodily harm to David Krenbrink, by hitting him with a nightstick and by kicking him after he fell to the ground, causing a head wound and breaking a cheekbone.

The assault took place outside Sidney police detachment about 4 a.m. as Krenbrink and a companion were being taken from a police car. Another member of the force and two members of Victoria city police stood by.

Judge Cashman said he found the case "one of the most difficult, if not the most difficult, case involv-

900 bottles seized

Colwood and Saanich police seized nearly 900 bottles of beer overnight Friday as the police crackdown continued on rowdy beach parties in Greater Victoria.

A Saanich police spokesman said its 10-member beach patrol charged 11 persons. No charges were laid by Colwood RCMP.

The Saanich charges included minors being in possession of liquor, supplying liquor to minors and minors unlawfully in a liquor premises.

One person was arrested for being drunk in a public place.

The squad seized 493 bottles of beer, 12 bottles of cider, and 179 ounces of spirits.

Colwood RCMP seized 393 bottles of beer, five bottles of wine and four bottles of hard liquor while breaking up parties at Esquimalt Lagoon, Thetis Lake and Mathieson Lake.

POLISHED TO PERFECTION, the Canadian Scottish Regiment (Princess Mary's) paraded under sunny skies this morning to be inspected by their colonel-in-chief, Princess Alexandra, at the Legislative Buildings. Trudeau lashes Levesque in fiery Montreal address

By MARY JANIGAN
FP News Service

MONTREAL — Gunslinger Pierre Trudeau has taken dead aim at Quebec Premier Rene Levesque with the demand that he tell voters what he will do if they defeat sovereignty-association on May 20.

In a combative and already controversial speech to the Montreal Chamber of Commerce Friday, the prime minister ridiculed Levesque's promise that if Quebecers vote Yes, a sense of "fair play" will force the federal government and the provinces to the bargaining table.

And — in his first Quebec speech in the referendum battle — he drew elaborate and provocative comparisons between the "courage" of other mass independence movements and what he called the "dead end," cowardly philosophy of the Parti Quebecois.

"Mr. Levesque and his ministers have been telling us that they know what the rest of Canada will do if Quebec votes yes — he gives answers for others," shouted Trudeau as several thousand businessmen roared in approval.

"Now we ask them to tell us what they will do if Quebec votes no. Would Mr. Levesque renounce any aim of making Quebec an independent state? Would he sit down and negotiate a renewed federalism?

"Or would he say 'heads I win — tails you lose' and in my game if you vote yes, it means yes and if you vote no, it means another referendum."

Trudeau recalled the "fiery prophets" of Quebec separation in the 1950s, the men who forced his generation and future generations to channel all their energies into turbulent debates over Quebec's future. He contrasted this spirit with the current referendum question, which merely grants a mandate to discuss sovereignty-association with the rest of Canada.

"So this is the turning point, this is the question that whirled by my generation and following generations into years of debate," he jeered.

"Well, we will not break up this country on an ambiguity... We will not break up a country which has been in the forefront of world liberty and prosperity for more than 100 years for an ambiguous mandate."

Trudeau pointed out that Levesque has promised that sovereignty will not take place without association. Then he asked the group to imagine the Irish of the 1920s or the Algerian rebels of the 1950s or the Rhodesian guerrillas of the 1970s demanding independence only in return for monetary union with Great Britain, or permission to

Levesque replies

MONTREAL (CP) — Premier Rene Levesque said Friday he would attend a federal-provincial constitutional conference should the no forces win the May 20 Quebec referendum.

But Levesque, leader of the yes side in the referendum on sovereignty-association, added that he would not expect anything to come of such a meeting.

"We would go but we would go just to end up turning around in circles," Levesque told a news conference called to react to Prime Minister Trudeau's speech to the Chambre de Commerce de Montreal.

Convention centres a costly craze

By CAROL GOAR
FP News Service

OTTAWA — Like hoola hoops or disco dancing, the convention centre craze has hit Canada. But this is no harmless diversion — it is one of the most expensive and regionally divisive issues ever to hit a federal cabinet.

Seven major cities — Vancouver, Victoria, Edmonton, Toronto, Montreal, Ottawa and Halifax — are now holding their breath waiting to hear whether the national government will provide the multi-million-dollar assistance they need to build convention centres.

If the government helps fund even one of these shiny new meeting places, it sets a precedent of incalculable cost. A small army of mayors and reeves could converge on Ottawa, hands out and eyes gleaming.

If, on the other hand, the Liberals slam the door on their anxious supplicants, they are certain to set off a string of explosions from Halifax to Victoria.

The cities were led by the Clark government to believe federal money would be available for them. The Conservatives committed themselves last year to providing 25 per cent of the construction cost of a convention centre to every city or town which applied for a subsidy.

For the Liberals to reverse this promise now, would provoke accusations of everything from stinginess to deliberate deception from the disappointed municipalities.

All Industry Minister Herb Gray has said so far is that the Tory policy is under review.

The lobbying has reached the high-pressure stage. Barely a day goes by that some MP does not jump out of his seat in the House of Commons and demand to know when his municipality can get to work on its convention centre.

Meanwhile, impatient municipal authorities are going directly to cabinet, phoning ministers constantly to press their cases.

As the construction season gets under way in each city, the badgering becomes more strident.

The government is expected to announce a policy within weeks.

"It can't be delayed much longer," said an industry department spokesman. "It has to be high on our priority list, with the MPs and municipalities pressing us all the time for a decision."

But the official refused to ing a police officer I have had to deal with."

It had attracted great public interest, and rightly so, because even the worst of criminals are entitled to proper treatment by police, Cashman said.

Viewed from any angle, the offence requires a jail sentence, he said, finding both a fine and any form of discharge inappropriate.

Even though sending a policeman to jail may place him in jeopardy and have a devastating effect on his career, Cashman recognized, "that does not seem to relieve me of my obligation to duty, my duty to society as I see it."

The judge suggested some form of protective custody may have to be arranged, which could be a harsher life than time in ordinary custody.

"I regret very much the conclusion I have had to come to," Cashman said, imposing three months each on the two counts, to be served concurrently in the Vancouver Island Regional Correction Centre on Wilkinson Road.

Police are not protected if they use excessive force, Cashman said. They come within the concept that they must be scrupulous in the exercise of the rights they are granted, or else be subject to more severe treatment.

He said account must also be taken of the ordinary citizen who sees a policeman treated differently, knowing that a policeman should be aware of the law and of the consequences of breaking it.

Cashman said it was obvious Bottrell had lost control of himself and may have allowed some bias against motorbikers to influence his behavior.

Lengthy submissions were made by counsel and four persons, including the mayor of Sidney, gave character evidence. Two petitions in support of Bottrell — totalling 180 names — also were laid before the court.

Mayor Norma Sealy had praise for Bottrell as a soft-spoken, well-mannered policeman who was an asset to Sidney as a constable and resident.

John Manning, publisher of the Sidney Review, said he was a personal friend of Bottrell whom he found particularly calm and professional in dealing with youth in the community.

Supervising corporals Gary Kaminski and Ricky Johnston found Bottrell's work satisfactory and reliable. Kaminski, who had known the constable 11 months, said he was trustworthy, courteous, hardworking and well-liked in the community, especially by adolescents, and his official assessment was favorable.

Defence counsel Gordon MacDonald said conviction, especially if it meant a jail term, would be catastrophic for Bottrell, and asked first for a conditional discharge, secondly for a fine.

He cited the example of a Brink's guard convicted of theft and sent to the penitentiary. Because he was a guard and associated by the prison population with law enforcement, he was considered in low esteem, and was beaten to death, MacDonald said.

"Everyone on that side of the fence is a rat," he said to indicate the feeling by prisoners toward policemen.

If the court were to disregard what might happen to Bottrell in jail, it would be a very serious matter, counsel pleaded.

"There is nothing in the evidence to indicate this was anything but an aberrant instance, a flare-up" in which Bottrell "lost his cool."

MacDonald said it is very unlikely the officer would ever again do operational police work.

Deterrence is the important factor but justice will allow compassion and leniency, he suggested. Police should be subject to the same considerations as others in the community.

Cashman said he thought it was important for the community to realize the police stood ready to investigate their own people as readily as anyone else.

MacDonald thought the community would not benefit by Bottrell going to jail.

Crown counsel Robert Mulligan said it would be wrong to grant a conditional discharge for the offences.

He suggested the injuries suffered by Krenbrink were clearly more serious than in any of the cases cited by MacDonald where leniency had been shown.

He noted that Bottrell had been counselled by a superior officer seven days before the offences, against the use of excessive force in the conduct of his duties. If it occurred, according to Mulligan, it would be dealt with by more than a caution, Bottrell was told.

Cashman said he would ignore that because it was being raised for the first time in these proceedings.

Mulligan also pointed out that following the offences, when Bottrell took Krenbrink to hospital for treatment, the victim was pushed against a wall and thrown down a corridor by Bottrell in his efforts to have the man attended by a doctor and nurses.

Bottrell was entitled to the credit accorded him by the community: "He's doing a difficult job," Mulligan said, "and should be able to draw on that bank of credit."

But police are given a great deal of power and a constable must carry out his duties on behalf of all. In making arrests he must use great care in the exercise of this power, counsel said.

What might have happened, he asked, if the roles had been reversed — if Bottrell had been assaulted by Krenbrink in company with his Bounty Hunter companions.

"We might be discussing today whether Krenbrink should be going to the penitentiary."

It is not much less severe, if at all, for a police officer to assault a citizen, and it may be more serious because he would be abusing his power, Mulligan said.

A prison term must be considered; conditional discharge would be against public interest, making it appear that a police officer is different from another citizen who might be treated more severely, he said.

Bottrell elected to say nothing before Cashman delivered sentence.

He sat down and appeared to stare straight ahead as the judge retired.

Spiderman expected tonight

Victorians who took their youngsters to the Autorama at Memorial Arena Friday expecting to see Spiderman can get in free today if they can prove they attended the opener, show organizers said today.

A confusing advertisement Friday indicated Spiderman would appear that night.

All other publicity said correctly he would appear Saturday and Sunday only.

While no ticket stubs were issued Friday, some patrons had their hands stamped. The show is open until 11 tonight and from noon to 10 p.m. Sunday.

join the francophone union or the Commonwealth.

"The world would have greeted the fight with an immense burst of laughter," he said.

He pointed out that even peaceful independence movements like those in Grenada and Fiji concentrated on independence — and only then asked to join the Commonwealth. He constantly contrasted their "pride" with Levesque's "ambiguity."

And he hinted that Levesque lacked the courage of earlier Quebec separatists because he knew that Quebecers would defeat a mandate to separate.

Then the prime minister turned his guns on Levesque's promise that the federal government and the provinces — despite their rejection of sovereignty-association — would be forced to the bargaining table in the spirit of "fair play."

He again drew an elaborate and controversial comparison with Cuba and Haiti, asking his audience to imagine these countries holding a referendum and deciding to join Canada.

"So, in the name of democracy, in the name of fair play, are we obliged to forge this union just because they said yes massively?" Trudeau shouted, while his audience cheered in glee.

He said that those leaders would have at least sounded out Canada's opinion before holding a referendum and risking the humiliation of a refusal. He stressed continued federal and provincial opposition to the scheme. And he insisted that since there can be no sovereignty without association, no one will ever negotiate association because the provinces and the federal government want a united country.

"We will speak when you are serious, when you have the courage of your convictions and when you present to the people of Quebec a proposal which says what you really want to do — which is independence," shouted Trudeau. "We will speak then."

Trudeau's impassioned 40-minute speech stands in direct contrast to his often-scholarly rejection of sovereignty-association in the Commons several weeks ago. Moreover, his explosive comparisons with other independence movements and with mock Cuban and Haitian proposals are sure to inflame the already heated campaign.

Sunshine will predominate in most areas today although some patches of fairly high cloud will be present in a few regions as a rather weak system passes overhead. A ridge of high pressure will strengthen over the province during the rest of the weekend. This will hold Pacific weather systems well offshore and allow afternoon temperatures to rise to comfortable levels. Most areas will reach 20 degrees on Sunday while parts of the southern interior should record values in the upper twenties.

Education's image not valid: trustee

VANCOUVER (CP) — The greatest challenge facing school boards in the 1980s is to improve the public image of the school system, the outgoing president of the B.C. School Trustees Association said Friday.

Rubymay Parrott said school boards have to convince the public that the education system is sound and healthy in the face of declining enrolments and increased costs.

"The image of education in B.C., across Canada and in the U.S. is tarnished and needs to be polished," she told the association's annual meeting. "How often do we as trustees speak out with pride on our schools, our employees, our accomplishments?"

"One year ago, the business of public school education was a part-time afterthought in the government of this province," she said, referring to former education minister Pat McGeer, who was unpopular with both trustees and teachers because he constantly criticized the school system. "Today, we have a full-time minister of education (Brian Smith).

"Our working relationship with the B.C. Teachers' Federation is better than it ever has been. We're all finally realizing we're all in the educational boat and have to pull together.

"We realize the education of the child is of paramount concern, and if one pulls too hard on his oar while the other one slackens his stroke, it's the child in the classroom who suffers."

Earlier, two prominent education spokesmen said schools cannot teach children what to believe in.

George Pedersen, president of Simon Fraser University, and Clifford Pitt, director of the Ontario Institute for Studies in Education, said schools are not the place to instil values in children.

In a discussion at the B.C. School Trustees Association's annual convention, the two said schools can only present society's values systems and teach children to decide for themselves what matters.

"The question of values is probably the most important issue we have to deal with over the next decade or two," Pitt said. "On one hand we have the values of an industrial society based on production and extravagant consumption, and on the other hand we have human values — the values of development of the individual, of self-expression, development of a personal sense of right and wrong — some kind of a sense of moral, ethic or philosophic commitment.

"I would go so far as to predict in the future there is going to be increasing conflict between these two sets of values."

Pedersen said schools experience change more slowly than the rest of society and so cannot reflect social values adequately.

"The school system is a conservative one," he said. "It's unlikely the schools can play a major role with respect to leading social reform."

'Middle class' norm

VANCOUVER (CP) — In spite of changing lifestyles, schools admit that their programs are still aimed at children from middle-class families.

And because children from broken homes sometimes have a hard time fitting in, they're often labelled problem children.

"We don't like that label," Bill Borgen, a University of B.C. education professor, said Friday. "The children don't think they have a problem, that's just the way they live."

But the problem often lies in the schoolchildren's schoolwork, Borgen told a session at the B.C. School Trustees Association's annual meeting.

"Children do not feel particularly good when their family breaks up," he said. "It certainly affects their behavior in school.

Borgen, speaking in a panel discussion, said factors like family disruptions, poverty and transience can lead to vandalism, depression and sometimes suicide, drug use and other means of escape, and suspension from or dropping out of school.

Drug, booze bill: $43B

VANCOUVER (CP) — Alcohol and drug dependency is costing North Americans $43 billion a year, says James L. Francek, a Detroit consultant on alcoholism.

Francek, head of employee health services counselling for Ford Motor Company, said Friday that one-third of all hospital beds used in both Canada and the United States are related to alcoholism, and one-third of all suicides are attributed to alcohol or drugs.

He was speaking to the annual meeting of Interlock, a non-profit organization which provides confidential and voluntary assistance to employees to help resolve difficulties that affect ability to work.

Four to 11 per cent of all work forces in North America are affected by alcohol, Francek said, and the result is a tremendous drain on productivity and soaring health costs.

"One thing that particularly disturbs me," he said, "is that the younger person is not necessarily walking into alcohol problems when he enters the work force. He or she is instead bringing that problem with them."

In a report tabled at the meeting, Interlock noted that in analysing seven fatal industrial accidents in one industry in B.C., the Workers Compensation Board found that five of the seven workers killed had been suffering from some emotional crisis before their accidents.

"Each life might have been saved if a supervisor, fellow union member, or the person himself had been alert to the stress the worker faced that day," the report said.

Pay your leader, Tothill tells Grits

HARRISON HOT SPRINGS (CP) — Provincial Liberal leader Jev Tothill appealed to the pocketbooks of party followers Friday, telling them they'll have to pay if the party is to be reborn in the province.

Tothill, who took over as B.C. Liberal chief 14 months ago and has seen the party go from bad to worse — with no elected members in either the B.C. or federal parliaments — said neither he nor anyone else will be able to rebuild the party without money.

The Duncan teacher, who spoke at the opening session of the annual provincial convention, faces a vote which will determine if the party is to hold a leadership review within a year. If 35 per cent of delegates want a contest it will have to be held.

But Tothill said if delegates do vote in the poll, there should be no representation without taxation.

"When you place your ballot in the box, also place a cheque made out to the provincial leader's fund," he told the 150 delegates.

He noted the B.C. party, which at Dec. 31 had a deficit of $12,696, has no money budgeted for a full-time, salaried leader. And, he added, the expense should not be fobbed off on a "downtown bagman."

Members hope a reborn Liberal party again will become a potent force in the province and help in the restoration of the tattered remains of the federal party in B.C.

Some Liberals say they hope a salaried leader's post will attract a better-known candidate to the leadership. Both Tothill and party president Shirley McLoughlin have estimated it would cost about $75,000 annually to pay a top-quality leader, expenses and one staff member.

Leadership and financing are to be the major preoccupations of delegates at the weekend meeting.

Jack Davis, MLA at large

Jack Davis distinguishes himself from his backbench colleagues in the Social Credit caucus with independent thought and a willingess to express it. He has become familiar as a prolific writer of letters-to-the-editor.

Although a member of the governing party, he has no qualms about expressing opinions that contradict those of cabinet ministers and even the government as a whole.

Needless to say he doesn't conform to traditional party politics. He uses the media to attempt to stimulate public thought and sway public opinion. He uses the Legislature, not the backrooms, to address the leaders of his own party. He is an independent in the ranks of the faithful.

But he's a MLA who seems more inclined to provoke rather than revolt against the party. British Columbia, indeed the country, could use more backbenchers willing to research and present informed comment.

Why does the government tolerate him? He is so well entrenched in the North Vancouver-Seymour riding that the Social Credit party will hold out the welcome mat as long as he flies their colors. Not even a criminal conviction nearly two years ago could dim his constituents' faith.

Whether or not one agrees with his opinions, it's impossible not to admire a free spirit.

While a couple of his former cabinet colleagues are trying to convince the government and Vancouver Islanders that a $2 to $5 billion bridge between the Island and mainland is the way to solve transportation problems, Davis tries to restrain their enthusiasm. He says the bridge is not necessary at the this time and the expenditure of $500 million on new ferries would handle the anticipated traffic until at least 1990.

His party tabled a budget that will cut taxes by about $50 million a year. Davis said the reduction should have been in the order of $200 or $300 million from both personal income and corporate taxes.

He was the only politician to address the possible ramifications for B.C.'s oil supplies if the Trans-Mountain, or Canadian route, was chosen to move Alaska heavy crude to the mid-western United States. He pointed out that by reversing the existing Trans-Mountain line, B.C. could be cut off from Alberta light crude supplies.

And now, Davis suggests that if the government is prepared to spend $1 million on a feasibility study for a fixed-link between the Island and mainland, the government should spend a similar amount on a rapid transit system for downtown Vancouver. The technology he has in mind is an aerobus, or series of cable cars, that would cost the government one tenth as much as a monorail system.

Davis has so far avoided a public image of political eccentricity, a risk always present in his secular position. Experience and research have kept him from a such a pitfall. Perhaps a few of colleagues, both in the government and opposition backbenches would follow his lead.

Credibility gap becomes a gulf

WASHINGTON — Some very odd things are happening in Washington these days. Officials, like Cyrus Vance, who opposed and guessed right about the military rescue mission in Iran, were permitted to resign. And those who favored it and offered to resign were kept on.

President Carter was very generous with the Pentagon officials who presided over this military disaster, even when they recommended too few planes that got left in the sands of Iran or bumped into one another in the night.

No scapegoats

Carter congratulated the Pentagon and its commandos for their courage, and insisted there would be "no scapegoats." Later on, no doubt, there will be an "investigation" about why the military power of the United States, which is the shield not only of the Republic but of the free nations of the world, made such a mess of an undetected military exercise in the Iranian desert.

The element of accident is understandable — three choppers dropping out in the sand, and another misjudging the space on a turn around a big fuel plane and setting them both afire — but what has happened since then is not so understandable.

The president is now arguing that somehow this tragedy in Iran has worked to his advantage. His administration is saying that the dispersal of the hostages from the U.S. Embassy in Tehran into other Iranian cities might be all to the good, and he will still consider military action to liberate them.

His allies disagree with him on this and Vance resigned because he believed the president was wrong. But the president is now going to come out of the Rose Garden and take his case to the American people.

He is doing so with an odd argument and at an odd time. Despite the failure of his rescue mission in Iran, he has proclaimed that the plight of the hostages was "alleviated to some degree." Even his closest advisers are afraid that, since the hostages are now scattered around Iran, their plight is even worse than before, and that Carter's threats of new military actions to rescue them are not realistic.

The president's supporters are relieved that he is now going to end his political isolation in the White House and carry his arguments against Senator Kennedy, Governor Reagan and John Anderson to the American people.

They believe, and even many of Carter's disappointed supporters agree, that on the stump and in political debates, he has nothing to fear; indeed, that he will probably demonstrate his superiority over the other presidential candidates. But they are almost embarrassed by Carter's arguments for finally getting out of the Rose Garden.

His problems in Iran and his economic problems at home have not been "alleviated" in the last few weeks. Even his own government economic index, designed to predict future trends in the American economy, reported this week the sharpest decline into recession in five-and-a-half years. Yet he told the nation's community leaders this week that none of these problems of Iran, Afghanistan, energy or inflation were all that critical.

"I believe," he said, "that they are manageable enough now for me to leave the White House for a limited travel schedule, including some campaigning, should I choose to do so . . ."

This is the sort of thing that increasingly worries Washington about Carter. Very few people ever believed that he had to stay in the Rose Garden to deal with the hostage problem in the first place, or that he is getting out of it because the problem has changed. The suspicion here is that he used time and space not because of the hostages but because of politics.

Political problem

In short, Carter has been developing not merely a credibility gap but a much wider credibility gulf, and for Jimmy Carter this is a really serious personal and political problem.

For he came to Washington proclaiming a "new morality" and rejecting the old political expediency he is now suspected of using. He is in deep trouble in the popularity polls at home, and with his allies in Europe, Japan and the Middle East, precisely because he has given them the impression that in his handling of foreign affairs, even with his closest friends like Cyrus Vance, he has been playing the politics of re-election.

Allan Fotheringham

Social event of the year

OTTAWA — Well, gee golliwogs, Dr. Fotheringham, this has saved my day by bumping into you.

How so?

Well, you know, the world is falling apart, what with the Iran fiasco and the Olympics collapsing and London being turned into hostage street-theatre and all. I guess all Ottawa is absolutely topsy-turvey with the drama.

No. Not a murmur.

You mean Ottawa hasn't heard?

A crucial time

Oh no. For once, Ottawa has happened to hear what's going on. But what you have to realize is that Ottawa is preoccupied with the most crucial social event of the year.

Really? The diplomats' ball?

No, the geriatric version of the Junior Prom. It's the annual press gallery dinner. It delineates the social pecking order of the town. Since the only real industry of Ottawa is status, it is a vital event, marking the order of importance and scarring people's rank in the scheme of things for the 365 days to come.

How is this done?

Quite simple. It's like an Aztec rite or a Grecian sacrifice of the virgins. Each card-carrying member of the press gallery is allowed to invite just one politician, or mandarin, or social-climbing member of the incestuous beehive known as Parliament Hill.

Sounds reasonable to me.

Eminently resonable. Just like the Peloponnesian Wars. Just like the inexorable logic of the Junior Prom. Ever heard of wallflowers? Ever heard of a rising (or fading) cabinet minister who two days before The Event is about to be unveiled as not having a single friend, a lone mark, a solitary leak-recipient in town?

You're not suggesting that the top-ranking and high-minded gentlemen and ladies who run our country would worry about such piffling speculation as to their desirablity as dining mates and drinking companions?

Is the Pope Polish? Some of the muscle exerted in the dying moments by neglected dates would do credit to Arnold Schwarzenberger.

Surely you're not giving the impression that incipient wallflowers who have jets and chauffeurs and zillion-dollar budgets at their disposal would stoop so low as to bully a lowly radio reporter for an invitation so that they have the privilege of seeing themselves immolated in a vicious skit that comments on their acumen, appetite and ancestors?

Let's put it this way. The jockeying in the waning hours as to which broadcast executive is seated where and which minister has to find a suddenly pressing engagement in Saskatoon that night makes the debate over corsages at the high school graduation dance look like duck soup.

This is outrageous. I can understand some of the minor muckymucks in the cabinet getting their shorts into a twist over this, but surely the real leaders of our nation don't get involved in this country club wrestle for prestige?

You kidding? As of late Friday, Speaker Jeanne Sauve was involved in a furious struggle with the executive of the press gallery since she wanted all the star head table guests at her private champagne reception — well away from the lowly herd. Mr. Pierre Himself was furious and Iran, Afghanistan and Cyrus Vance had receded rapidly into the sunset.

But surely someone of even logic and chilled mein can rise above all this nonsense and see it as it really is, a mere hiccup in the social history of Ottawa?

Well, all I know is that Governor-General Edward Schreyer and Mrs. Schreyer, who have been holidaying and crowning Dutch queens in Holland, are zooming in from London on a plane to arrive just an hour before the pre-cocktail, pre-party parties start. They want to see — like all of us — which cabinet ministers have been left out to lunch and therefore will fade rapidly on the Rockcliffe Park dinner circuit for the next 12 lonely months.

Hot toddy

And you, Dr. Foth?

Can't take the pace anymore. Staying home with hot toddy and an old copy of the Collected Wit of Herb Gray.

Anything else?

Yeah, just one thing. Early this week, there was a flower girl selling blossoms on the Sparks Street Mall here in Ottawa.

That's nice.

But she was earing a parka.

Thanks Doc.

Meeting a princess

The way to see royalty is with a group of children.

Children who are still so young that they know nothing of politics or governmental systems. Children whose starry-eyed wonder has not been blurred by thoughts of republicanism or classlessness. Children whose knowledge of "princesses" comes from fairy stories that begin "Once upon a time . . ." and end "and they all lived happily ever after."

Thus it was, accompanying a group of 10 Brownies to be part of a large group of Brownies, Guides, Pathfinders and Rangers who were to greet Princess Alexandra when she arrived at the legislative buildings Thursday morning.

The group lined the pathways from the place where the Royal limousine was to stop at the entrance to the west wing of the legislative buildings where the princess was to be met by Premier Bennett and other government dignitaries.

Girls stood two and three deep, carefully arranged with the taller ones at the back so everyone could get a good view.

As they waited, Education Minister Brian Smith gave small groups lessons in royal etiquette.

"Do you know who you're waiting for?" he asked one group.

"Our commissioner," beamed a seven-year-old. "She said she'd be right here."

"No, after that."

"The princess."

"Have you ever seen a princess before?"

"No, not a real one."

But some knew more. Some knew she was the Queen's cousin, and a few even that she now was 17th in line to the throne. And they knew that if she stopped to speak, you should call her "Your Royal Highness," and, if the opportunity presented itself, curtsey.

The next arrival was Premier Bennett, not much noticed by the Brownies but a hit with the older Guides and Pathfinders who began asking for autographs.

When the black limousine drew up, an immediate hush settled on the crowd. The princess and her entourage walked with Bennett and the B.C. officials along the walk, pausing briefly to ask some children where they came from, where they went to school, if they had to go back to school when the celebrations were finished.

"She's pretty!" breathed an eight-year-old as the party entered the building.

"Yes," agreed her friend. "But she's older than I thought.

"She's older than my mother."

"In books, princesses are always real young."

Waiting for the royal party to leave again, excitement gave way to complaints about the chill, and children's games that could be played standing in one spot. When adults were near, questions arose.

"Why isn't she wearing her crown?"

"What do you think they're doing in there?"

"Perhaps she's changing her clothes."

The idea that they were holding a polite conversation didn't seem very exciting. "Do princesses have to do a lot of that?"

"Where's she going next?"

"Can we go too?"

Some of the children got the idea of asking for the Princess's autograph when she returned, and adults had to explain that this would be a serious breach of etiquette. "Princesses don't sign autographs. So many people would want them if they signed them that they'd never be able to sign them all. So they just don't sign any.

Adults from Britain told the group that the dignified and solemn welcome that had been offered when the Princess went in wasn't really appropriate.

"Cheer and clap," they said. "The Princess doesn't know what to do with such a quiet crowd. In Britain, they're used to children cheering and clapping all the time."

The Brownies and Guides obliged willingly. A much noisier group greeted the Princess when she emerged than when she went in. She stopped to talk to more children before climbing back in the limousine for the drive up-Island.

The final tribute came, with a long sigh, from a seven-year-old on the way home. "I wish I was a princess."

Even with all the polite conversation a princess has to make?

"I wouldn't like that, but . . . yes, even then."

The monarchy will never die as long as there are children to learn that the Royal Family is something special.

Stress at the office

BOSTON — They used to say it with flowers or celebrate it with a somewhat liquid lunch. National Secretaries Week was always good for at least a token token of appreciation. But the way the figures add up now, the best thing a boss could have done for a secretary last week was cough up for her cardiogram.

"Stress and the Secretary" has become the hottest new syndrome on the heart circuit.

It seems that it isn't those Daring Young Women in their Dress for Success Suits who are following men down the cardiovascular trail to ruin. Nor is it the female professionals who are winning their equal place in intensive care units.

It is powerlessness and not power that corrupts women's hearts. And clerical workers are the number one victims.

In the prestigious Framingham study, Dr. Suzanne Haynes, an epidemiologist with the National Heart, Lung and Blood Institute, found that working women as a whole have no higher rate of heart disease than housewives. But women employed in clerical and sales occupations do. Their coronary disease rates are twice that of other women.

"This is not something to ignore," says Dr. Haynes, "since such a high percentage of women work at clerical jobs." In fact, 35 per cent of all working women, or 18 million of us, hold these jobs.

When Dr. Haynes looked into their private lives, she found the women at greatest risk — with a one in five chance of heart disease — were clerical workers with blue-collar husbands, and three or more children. When she then looked at their work lives, she discovered that the ones who actually developed heart disease were those with non-supportive bosses who hadn't changed jobs very often and who had trouble letting their anger out.

In short, being frustrated, dead-ended, without a feeling of control over your life is bad for your health.

The irony in all the various and sundry heart statistics is that we now have a weird portrait of the Cardiovascular Fun Couple of the Office: The Type A Boss and his secretary. The male heart disease stereotype is, after all, the Type A aggressive man who always needs to be in control, who lives with a great sense of time urgency . . . and is likely to be a white-collar boss.

"The Type A man is trying to be in control. But given the way most businesses are organized there are, in fact, few ways for them to be in control of their jobs," says Dr. Haynes. The only thing the Type A boss can be in control of is his secretary who in turn feels . . . well you get the picture. He's not only getting heart disease, he's giving it.

Now then, as if all this weren't enough to send you out for the annual three-martini lunch, clerical workers are increasingly working for a new Type A boss: the computer.

These days fewer women are sitting in front of bosses with notepads and more are sitting in front of Visual Display Terminals. Word processors, data processors, microprocessors . . . these are the demanding, time-conscious, new automatons of automation. According to the IBM Word Processing Plan, "In the office of 1985 . . . there are no secretaries." Just pools of processors.

There is nothing intrinsically evil about computers. I am writing this on a VDT and if you try to take it away from me, I will break your arm. But as Working Women, the national association of office workers, put it in their release last week, automation is increasingly producing clerical jobs that are de-skilled, down-graded, dead-ended and dissatisfying.

As Karen Nussbaum of the Cleveland office described it, the office of the future may well be the factory of the past. Work on computers is often reduced to simple, repetitive, monotonous tasks. Workers are often expected to produce more for no more pay, and there are also reports of a disturbing trend to processing speed-ups and piece-rate pay, and a feeling among clerical workers that their jobs are computer-controlled.

"It's not the machine, but the way it's used by employers," says Working Women's research director, Judith Gregory. Too often, automation's most important product is stress.

Groups like Working Women are trying to get clerical workers to organize in what they call "a race against time" so that computers will become their tools instead of their supervisors.

But in the meantime, if you are 1) a female clerical worker, 2) with a blue-collar husband, 3) with three or more children, 4) in a dead-end job, 5) without any way to express anger, 6) with a Type A boss, 7) or a Type A computer controlling your work day . . . YOU BETTER START JOGGING.

Levesque, Ryan . . . 'an atmosphere of crisis mixed with carnival'

Both sides fail to get the message

By MARJORIE NICHOLS
Vancouver Sun

MONTREAL — Stepping into this city in the midst of the referendum campaign is a disorienting experience. There is an atmosphere of crisis mixed with carnival that the newspaper headlines and the television pictures cannot properly convey.

It is rather like arriving four hours late and cold sober at a gala cocktail party. The weekend edition of the English-language Montreal Gazette has an entire section devoted to the referendum debate.

The tabloid French-language papers are devoted almost exclusively to coverage of the referndum campaign and the Stanley Cup semifinals. Lapel buttons espousing either the oui or the non side are plastered on workmen's coveralls and expensive business suits. To an untutored observer there is no apparent pattern.

The timing of the vote is, of course, straight out of Machiavelli. May 20, the day Quebecers go to the polls, is the day after the Victoria Day holiday weekend.

Quebec has long ignored the celebration of this "Anglo" holiday, but it is nonetheless a federal holiday in the province and the weekend when the middle class traditionally travel to the Laurentians or northern New York to open up summer cottages.

Levesque is clearly jockeying for every vote. How many federal employees are going to cancel plans to bootleg a vacation on to the long weekend in order to stay in town and vote? The answer could be extraordinarily crucial if the polls are accurate in showing the oui and non forces running in a virtual dead heat.

Perhaps the most surprising aspect of all to a Westerner who hasn't visited Montreal for more than two years is that the divisions created by the referendum are as deep among Anglophones as among Francophones.

At a convention last weekend in Halifax, for example, an old Ottawa friend who used to labor for Bob Stanfield and is now employed, ironically enough, by the Council for Canadian Unity, announced that he remains undecided on how to vote.

The gentleman is Tom Sloan, a big bear of a man, with impeccable federalist credentials. Sloan's argument is that a oui vote is not a vote for sovereignty-association but a vote in favor of a revised federalism.

He and some other members of Montreal's Anglo community don't believe, for example, that the Western provinces are being truthful when they say that they will never negotiate sovereignty-association with Levesque.

Guy Saint-Pierre, the director of the non campaign, tells Sloan in blunt terms that he is wrong. Saint-Pierre says that a 51 per cent vote in favor of sovereignty-association will mean, simply, that there will be no country called Canada five years down the road.

The thought occurs that if the yes forces win, it will be a perverse tribute, not to the nationalistic forces in the province of Quebec, but to the cynicism about politicians generally.

Allan Blakeney of Saskatchewan and Peter Lougheed of Alberta have both been to Quebec and spelled out the blunt message that they will not be at the bargaining table if the province votes in favor of sovereignty-association. Only a no vote, they have said, will produce the demanded constitutional reforms.

Bill Bennett is due in Quebec in two weeks to deliver what doubtless will be a similar message to a gathering of Montreal's business community. Yet there is no reason to believe that Bennett will succeed where Blakeney and Lougheed have clearly failed, if he has nothing more to deliver than more threats.

Ontario's Bill Davis headed into Quebec this week to work the grassroots in an earnest attempt to bolster the no forces. Opinion is deeply divided about whether Davis will help or hinder the cause, in view of his much-publicized equivocation over whether to build a French-language high school in the rural Ontario town of Penetanguishene.

The suspicion grows that the English-speaking leadership of the country has grossly underestimated the strength of the yes forces and the potentially apocalyptic outcome.

The suspicion also grows that the people of Quebec, among them some well-meaning federalists, have grievously misinterpreted the message from the other provinces that they are willing to let Quebec pack its bags and leave if the vote goes the wrong way.

'MORE TALKS . . . OR CHAOS'

By HUGH WINSOR
The Globe and Mail

English Canada would be wrong, politically and morally, to refuse to talk to Quebec about sovereignty-association if the Parti Quebecois wins a majority in the referendum.

That blunt statement is the conclusion of Richard Simeon, who heads the Institute of Intergovernmental Relations at Queen's University, and it contrasts sharply with most comments coming out of English Canada.

Virtually all the politicians in English Canada have been busy denying they will consider the PQ option and, for obvious reasons, have been reluctant to do much crystal ball-gazing about what will happen after the referendum.

Fortunately, academics have fewer inhibitions about such speculation and, as a result, Dr. Simeon spelled out the implications of a oui or non vote as he saw them to the Toronto chapter of the Institute of Public Administration last week.

It is a valuable exercise to run through the scenarios in advance, rather than wake up in panic May 21.

Dr. Simeon starts from the assumption that the overwhelming concern in Quebec is for change. Therefore the real campaign is one to determine which interpretation of the referendum question vis-a-vis its probability of bringing about change is most persuasive for Quebecers.

"If it is seen as a vote for change, for deblocage, the PQ will almost certainly win: if the federalists succeed in convincing voters it is a vote for outright independence, then they will probably win," he said.

Dr. Simeon forsees tense times after May 20. If the no forces win narrowly — say 53 to 47 per cent — he postulates that it will still mean that almost half of all Quebecers, and probably a majority of French-speaking citizens, will have expressed their disaffection for the federal system.

"At least some of them will feel bitterly betrayed. The voters' verdict will be accepted, but the goal will remain unchanged. There is no chance at all that the drive for independence will be decisively defeated."

Since a large number of the people who voted no will have done so on the basis of the promise that their negative is also a vote for change, it is extremely important that a constitutional conference is convened quickly, he argues, and not postponed until after a provincial election in Quebec.

On the other hand, a oui vote, regardless of the attempts to downplay its effects in advance, "will set in motion powerful and unpredictable political forces. In Quebec, the stark fact will be that a majority has, at a minimum, called for major and rapid change, and that a very large number will expect rapidly to proceed toward sovereignty-association."

Outside Quebec he postulates there is likely to be confusion and dismay, colored with bitterness and hostility. There is unlikely to be much willingness for flexibility.

Under these circumstance, Dr. Simeon again argues for an early constitutional conference with sovereignty-association on the table. But the quid pro quo is that renewed federalism is also on the table and if some form of special status or other form of decentralization acceptable to the Quebec government cannot be found as a compromise, he argues that both options be put to the whole country in a referendum.

Not a very optimistic scenario, to say the least, but it is something to chew on.

What Iran wants

What began as an invasion of one embassy in the world has now threatened to rip open our civilization. A President launches a "rescue" mission to free the hostages — pressured as he is by over five months of futile negotiation. This mission fails but in the aftermath one wonders how many lives would have been lost if it had "succeeded."

Then we witness the apparent gloating over the dead bodies of the marines burned to death on an Iranian desert.

Having spent three weeks in Iran at the end of March and having talked at length with the student militants (as well as with Banisadr and Ghotbzadeh) I can attest to the fact that indeed we are faced with a strange and, I believe, unprecedented adversary. I found it impossible to understand why the students would exhibit these bodies to the Western press when they had been so scrupulous in observing values of protection and well-being with the hostages, when they had constantly invoked Allah as the guardian of their actions.

I reached the embassy by phone recently and received an explanation for the apparent depravity of the students in opening the plastic coverings over the bodies. Contrary to what was implied, the students insisted to me that they simply "want some countries to see what happened in the desert . . . because tomorrow maybe Carter is going to say nobody is killed in Iran . . . We wanted them to hear this is a fact. We wanted to show the ugly things of Carter . . . because he made this decision that caused this man to be burned up here in the desert of Iran." The students insisted to me that their only purpose in this demonstration was to reveal the "dangerous and bloody" result of this intention. They expect that the full story of what happened in the desert has not been told and they want other countries to investigate the wreckage.

Despite my deep reservations about the fanaticism of Shi'a Islam and the dangerously dogmatic position of the students, I do believe that they are utterly sincere.

Their position is a religious one; whether we agree with it or not, they are determined to show to the world the moral void created when nations ignore the dimension of the spirit. We can revile them, we can impute the worst motives to them; however, in their hearts they are convinced of the absolute righteousness of their position. We must recognize there is a point equidistant between Shi'a Islam fanaticism and American egocentric pride. There is the solution. — Robin W. Carlsen, 1225 Sunnyside Avenue.

Nice try, but . . .

It is not unknown for governments to take credit for solving problems which they themselves created but the Social Credit government has raised that art to new heights. The latest practitioner of the art is Agriculture Minister Jim Hewitt who is taking credit for preventing Cargill Grain from increasing its control over B.C.'s poultry processing industry.

Nice try, Mr. Hewitt, but there are quite a few people who remember that it was the Socred government that brought Cargill here in the first place by selling them B.C.-owned Panco Poultry. Sort of reminds me of setting up an ethics committee after the dirty tricks got out of the stable. — Kevin McFadden, 424 Powell Street.

Legal, so equal

Most people, intelligent or otherwise, know that alcoholic beverages and tobacco are not exactly the healthiest forms of intake the human body needs. Just the same, at the present time, like it or not, alcoholic beverages and tobacco are products which can be legally sold, bought and consumed, so until it is against the law to sell, buy or consume the aforementioned products, a few basic principles should be adhered to.

Governments should not waste money on anti-drinking, anti-smoking propaganda as long as they are righteously reaping such huge profits from alcohol and tobacco sales. Governments should not allow just the print media to advertise alcohol and tobacco; radio and television must have equal rights as well. And finally, those people who are adamantly opposed to smoking and/or drinking should make sure they never sell, promote or invest money in conjunction with alcohol, tobacco and such enterprises which are involved in the alcohol-tobacco trade. — John Wickstrom, 3264 Shelley Street.

COMMERCIAL LENDING OPPORTUNITY

Our continued growth has created an opportunity to join our Head Office commercial lending operation. The major thrust of our lending has been real estate development and we now want to diversify. The intention will be to develop and adminster the loan portfolio as soon as possible.

Candidates for this position should be already proficient in commercial lending and be keen to develop further skills in the area. This is a challenging position which requires an individual with the ability to accept quickly increasing responsibilities and a preference for working in an informal but professional environment where decisions can be made quickly. Salary and benefits are attractive.

Please reply in writing indicating salary expectations to:

You don't rent your lamps from Hydro ... Why rent your phones from B.C. Tel?

B.C. Tel sells only the exterior casing (You rent the inner parts). But at "the other phone store", we'll sell, service and help you install an entire telephone. That way it can be moved, traded in, or given as a gift. Come in and compare our story. We won't "monopolize" the conversation.

Canadians bid for Egypt oil

CAIRO (Reuter) — Egypt's General Petroleum Authority has negotiated exploration agreements worth about $121 million with a number of major oil companies, including several Canadian companies, authority officials said.

They said the accords were initialled last month and that Egypt would receive an additional $15 million in signature bonuses.

The announcement said the agreements with the Canadian companies included two with Gulfstream Co. worth $37 million for exploration in the Western Desert and the Sinai; one worth $11 million with Polar Bear Co. for a Western Desert offshore area, and one worth $17 million with the Canadian group Brinco in the Western Desert.

American Conoco agreed to pay $13 million for a concession in the Sinai and, in a joint venture, Bonray Co. and Medoil Co. of the U.S. have agreed to pay $20 million for a location in the Western Desert.

Britain's L.K. Exploration Co. agreed to pay $23-million for exploration rights in the Sinai.

Sun Life moves on

TORONTO (CP) — On the move again, Sun Life Assurance Co. of Canada, which decided two years ago to shift its head office from Montreal to Toronto, has purchased a new site containing the former Lord Simcoe Hotel.

Chairman Thomas Galt said development delays at the first site across the street at First Canada Place led Sun Life to explore alternative site possiblities for its new headquarters.

Sun Life purchased the new site from Montreal financier R. Howard Webster for $9 million. The first site, which was to contain a 35-storey tower, has been excavated but nothing has been built.

predict when Gray would be ready to make his announcement.

Five years ago, convention centres were all but unheard-of in this country. Vancouver changed that.

City officials came to Ottawa in the late 70s — when Canada was just awakening to the tremendous potential of trade with the Far East — asking for help to build a $52-million Pacific Trade Centre.

It would be used for exhibits, trade fairs and conventions. The cost and sheer size of the project prevented Vancouver from going ahead on its own. The industry minister of the day, Jack Horner, promised to look into the matter. He was still looking when he and his party lost power a year ago.

Vancouver immediately took its case to the new Conservative government. Within months, it received the happy news that the Tories were prepared to pay a quarter of the cost of proposed convention centres — Vancouver's being first on the list for consideration.

In the meantime, other cities had caught the scent of federal money in the air.

By the end of last year, seven had submitted formal applications for a subsidy and several others were on the verge of doing so.

To complicate the situation still more, Winnipeg, which had built and paid for its own convention centre several years earlier, began demanding that it be reimbursed for 25 per cent of the cost.

And Hull, which had likewise incurred heavy municipal debts paying for a convention centre, (it asked for federal aid in 1975, but was told no program existed for convention centres), protested that it would be unfair to give Ottawa federal money to build a competing one right across the river.

The Conservatives were tossed out of office before they had to deal with the mess.

No one can begin to put a price tag on the Tory plan because the costs dependedentirely on how many cities applied for aid. But looking at the existing applications, it is clear the program would have been disturbingly expensive.

The anticipated cost of Halifax's convention centre is $12 million — meaning a $3 million federal contribution. Ottawa's centre would be part of an office and shopping complex valued at $36 million — calling for $9 million in federal funds.

Latest estimate for the Victoria convention centre is $8 million. A federal grant of about $2 million is being sought.

The drive for convention centres is easy to understand. The glass-and-concrete nerve centres breathe new life into seedy downtowns.

A convention centre is a quick way to create much-needed construction jobs. Once completed, it brings money-laden tourists to town and encourages private entrepreneurs to locate new shops, hotels amd restaurants in a city. The idea of government-funded convention centres caught fire in Florida in the early 70s and they've been proliferating ever since.

"They're all the vogue these days," said a federal official. "A city figures it needs one to be on the map."

But one MP — who asked to remain unnamed since his city is seeking a convention centre handout — couldn't help looking a few years further down the road.

"I don't know what we're going to do when every little city and town from St. Thomas to Medicine Hat has one of these things. There just isn't that much convention business."

Youngsters scramble

PRINCE GEORGE (CP) — The City of Prince George has launched a mass trash attack.

And during the next two weeks, youngsters will be vying for any available piece of debris they can lay their hands on in efforts to win the $400, $200 and $100 prizes offered by city council to the groups which collect the greatest amount of garbage.

Mayor Elmer Mercer said Friday he isn't accepting just any old litter.

"What we are after mostly is paper, cardboard, cans and broken bottles," he said, particularly from parks, greenbelts and boulevards.

Scout troops in the Interior city are one jump ahead of the mayor in the rubbish sweepstakes. They start their annual trash trek this weekend.

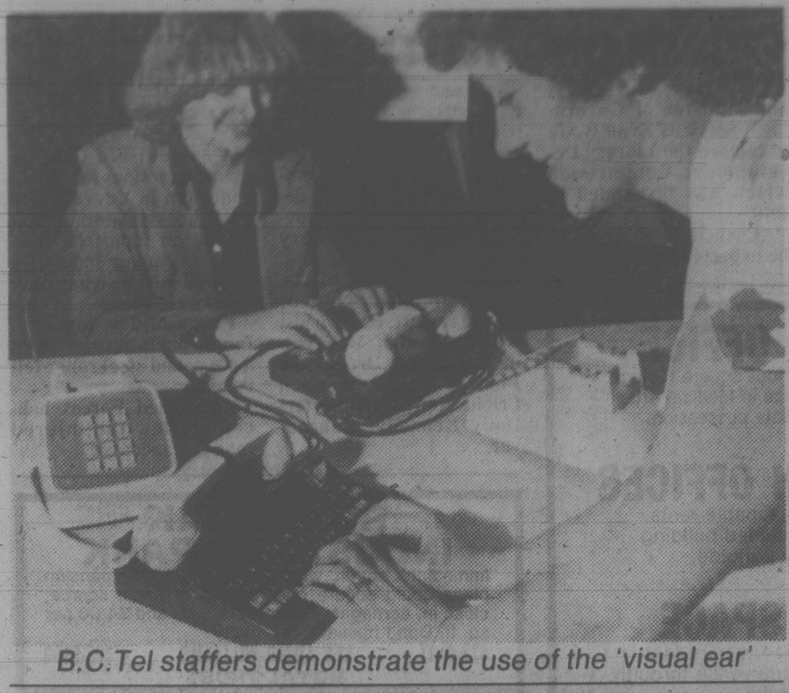
Deaf aim for public awareness



B.C.Tel staffers demonstrate the use of the 'visual ear'

If you're deaf, communicating with others is at best a challenge and at worst a terrific frustration.

Recent technology has provided important improvements in the lives of people with hearing impairments but increased public awareness of their problems could help even more.

For that reason each May the Deaf and Hard of Hearing Institute of V.I. sponsors a month of information presentations to let the public know about the problems of people with hearing difficulties and also to encourage others with hearing problems to seek help.

The institute has a display at Hillside Mall this weekend.

Some of the new technical aids such as the message centre terminal recently installed in the institute's Victoria office are on display.

The terminal allows deaf persons with special equipment in their home to use the telephone system to relay a typed message to the institute which will then pass that message on to whoever the person requests it be sent to.

Another recent innovation is caption-reading equipment for television. This allows deaf people who have special equipment for their sets to read captions now placed on about 20 hours of televison shows per week by one U.S. station.

About 200 people in Victoria are known to be deaf or have severe hearing impairments but there are likely others who could be helped to hear better, said Betty Ife, chairman of the hearing awareness campaign.

Deafness may be a kind of invisible handicap, said Ife, but that doesn't mean it's minor. Deafness, particularly from birth, makes language development very difficult and the public needs to understand the problems.

Anyone wanting more information can call the institute at 384-8088

Deadline extended for Iran 5

VANCOUVER (CP) — Immigration Minister Lloyd Axworthy has given five Iranian students who are stranded in Vancouver until the end of May to find a country that will accept them.

The five, on a University of Idaho architecture field trip in B.C. when President Carter barred entry of Iranians to the United States, previously had had their Canadian visas extended to May 7.

Axworthy said Friday in Ottawa they have until May 31 to explore the possibility of continuing their studies in other Western countries.

He also said they may apply for refugee status in Canada.

But a Vancouver immigration spokesman said Friday that so far the students have not indicated they intend to apply for refugee status.

Twilight years fraught with fear

VANCOUVER (CP.) — The world of a senior citizen in Vancouver is a world of fear and occasional violence, says a woman studying crimes against the elderly.

It is a world where the police are not helpful because they don't believe the reports of the elderly victims, Jeanette Auger, a University of B.C. doctoral candidate, said Friday.

Ms. Auger was the principal speaker at a panel discussion forming part of a two-day conference held in conjunction with the third annual convention of the Gerontology Association of B.C.

She said the most common crimes against seniors in Vancouver are purse snatching, mugging, fraud, burglary and in the West End, harassment by prostitutes and their clients.

"Oldsters seem to feel there is some social stigma if they are victims of crime and they feel guilty — they must have done something wrong to be put in this position," Auger said, "but they must overcome this and fight back."

Ms. Auger said seniors can fight back in many ways: banding together, talking about their experiences as victims of crime, forming patrols outside their apartments or rest homes and checking and reporting on strangers.

She even recommended they physically fight back, even though Vancouver police are opposed to the self-defence concept.

She told the audience of an 84-year-old woman she knows in a nursing home who had her jewelry stolen from her room.

The nursing home administrator denied the woman ever owned the jewelry, she said, and the victim's own daughter went along with the crime by trying to convince her mother that her memory was failing and that she had only imagined that she had the jewelry.

The daughter admitted going along with the administrator's lie, said Ms. Auger, because she feared if she made a fuss, the administration would make life miserable for her mother.

Company's coming so MLAs juggle hours

Prominent visitors mean a change in schedule for the B.C. legislature which normally sits from 2 to 6 p.m.

On Monday, nine federal cabinet ministers will meet their provincial counterparts in Victoria. A press conference has been called for 2 p.m. so the house will sit from 2:30 to 6:30 p.m.

On Tuesday a number of MLAs are invited to dinner in Vancouver with Prime Minister Trudeau and Prime Minister Ohira of Japan. To allow them to make their dinner date the house will sit from 1 p.m. to 5 p.m.

On Wednesday, the B.C. government plays host to Ohira at a luncheon in Vancouver. The house will sit that day from 3 p.m. to 7 p.m.

Government house leader Garde Gardom has also announced next Tuesday's sitting will be devoted to debate on a non-partisan resolution on Canadian unity.

Members on both sides of the house will go on record urging Quebecers to vote no in their May 20 referendum.

5,000 plants on for bargain prices

The sale will be held at the old gym (on McKenzie) from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m.

This is the second annual sale organized by the group which provides time, money and skill to University Gardens which are in a wooded area near the entrance to the campus near Henderson Road.

Plants on sale include rhododendrons, bedding plants, shrubs, vegetables, house plants and rock and alpine plants.

Fatality stats grim for moped riders

The Capital Region Safety Council has released some grim statistics for moped operators.

The council says that if results of a study completed by a safety research centre in North Carolina are any indication, as many as 28 moped operators will be killed each year in B.C. by 1984.

The study, noting a dramatic increase in moped use in recent years, showed that four per cent of fatal accidents involve mopeds.

It said the accident ratio is between 1.5 to four per 100 mopeds and found that while 2.3 per cent of all motorcycle mishaps result in death, only 1.2 per cent of those involving mopeds do. Still 11 per cent of all moped accidents result in serious injury.

The council is concerned about the impending problem and offers as possible solutions stiffer laws, special licensing and special narrow traffic lanes for mopeds and bicycles.

Tips For Lips

If lips are too narrow. Cheat a little by outlining the natural lipline. Fill in with a lighter shade in the centre and deeper shade in the corners. Lips too full. Cover them with liquid makeup. Outline within natural lipline. Darker shade in the centre, lighter at the corners. If mouth is too wide. Outline lips stopping short of the corners. Fill in the centre with a slightly darker shade.

Check On Cheeks

Cheeks take cream or powder blusher in fresh picked shades this season of ginger rose, apricot or misty pink. To bring eyes into sharper focus, blusher should be blended high on the cheekbones. One caution: Don't overdo it. A little hint of blusher can go a long way. A dash of frosted ivory powder to your cheekbones adds extra highlighting for an evening look.

Brush On Control

Use brushes whenever possible. They give you better control over fine lines, and you can always brush out color to soften and smudge hard edges. Use a sponge applicator with eyeshadow powder; it holds the powder, will not drop the grains in your eyes and prevents flaking. Use the tip of your finger for smooth, even blending over the larger areas of your face.

Draw On Beauty

Now we're giving busy beauties the makeup works in the hand . . . in a pencil. With pencils you can draw on a beautiful face as easy as 1-2-3. Elizabeth Arden's sheer foundation pencil goes on in soft, easy strokes for a natural finish. Use it for fast touch-ups, as a concealer. It even doubles as an under-the-eye stick. Blusher pencils contour cheeks. And there are lip pencils to shape and define your lips.

Too Thick Eyebrows

Try narrowing your eyebrows this way: 1. Brush them up. 2. Hold a pencil diagonally from the side of your nose to the outer corner of your eye. Your brows should not extend the pencil point. 3. Tweeze carefully underneath, removing 3 or 4 rows. 4. Brush brows against growth direction, trim longest hairs with nail scissors. Brush back.

by jake banky

Most of you innocent taxpayers don't understand the significance of the B.C. government decision to approve a study on whether a study should be carried out on the question of a fixed link between Vancouver Island and the mainland.

Some of you may even consider it pretty wishy-washy — a study on the need for a study.

But we experienced observers recognize it as nothing less than the birth of a new industry to be known as Linkology and encompassing the subtrades of Tunnelism, Bridgometry and Deferrification.

The $100,000 for the pre-study study is a small step for a fixed link but a giant step for consultants of every variety who cluster like ticks on the softer parts of government.

Their immediate reaction was to open the champagne and order a bigger yacht. Engineers were seen to embrace environmentalists.

They know that years and years and millions of dollars down the road, the studies will still be going on.

Stress factors for structural steel in sea currents, the effect of undersea excavations on the sex life of the tube worm, migration patterns of tourists and killer whales, interest rate trends in the money markets, availability of Pave Active Pass T-shirts, effectiveness of prayer during earthquakes, the fate of politicians held hostage by angry Gulf Islanders — all these issues will receive the same exhaustive scrutiny.

As the years pass, report will be stacked on report. Elaborate graphs will lie in the dust alongside intricate working models. Delegations will present briefs. Public meetings will be held in Port Hardy and Pouce Coupe. Angry demonstrators will march on the legislature. Politicians will wrangle. Royal commission will follow royal commission.

Eventually, some years after the privately-operated Black Bawlf Ferry, Jetfoil and Zeppelin Service has eliminated island transportation problems, the final recommendations will be ready.

The government of the day will sit on the report for several years more until it is leaked by a disgruntled civil servant to an elderly political reporter. And he will throw it away because it will no longer be of any interest.

Ideas may come and ideas may go, but consultants go on forever.

Bureaucracy works in strange ways its wonders to perform.

By order-in-council this week the cabinet rescinded the appointment of one John W. Klassen as a trustee of the Mapes Cemetery at Vanderhoof.

The reason: Klassen is now deceased and presumably at peace in the Mapes Cemetery. He had been rescinded earlier by Higher Authority.

Surely no one would be stupid enough to authorize the use of government money for a political poll.

Aside from the question of ethics, every expenditure of public funds eventually surfaces for scrutiny by the opposition. Surely it is a move too ridiculous to contemplate. Surely.

Don't be so sure.

The opposition has been asking pointed questions about a $2,500 account presented to government by Goldfarb Consultants of Toronto, a well-known polling firm. A civil servant had attached a note to the invoice, calling it "politically sensitive."

Provincial Secretary Evan Wolfe said the bill was for consultations on the effectiveness of government information programs and had nothing to do with politics. The NDP was unable to prove otherwise. And there it lies.

But it is appropriate to recall an incident in February, 1978, when the attorney-general commissioned a $116,000 study on people's attitudes to the law. The press acquired a copy of the questionnaire.

Among other things it wanted to know the public's reaction to the word "Socred" and how those being polled would vote in a provincial election.

Stupid? Yes. Too ridiculous to contemplate? Apparently not.

And speaking of surveys . . . in the past three years, 66,000 B.C. Ferry passengers have been subjected to six surveys covering a wide range of subjects. But with all the questions, the experts forgot to ask the passengers whether they had any complaints about the service.

Some comments were made anyhow. One popular one: "Why do we have to keep filling in questionnaires?"

A seventh survey was inflicted on travellers of the mid-coast run to Prince Rupert. Among other things, passengers were asked how they would rate the scenery.

Why, were they planning to change it?

Luckily, 98.1 per cent rated the scenery "good or better."

George Bullied doesn't see why a private business can't provide a social service

This man is so frustrated

By DEREK SIDENIUS

The office at George Bullied's Life-Centered Learning Hospice on the Malahat is quietly at work.

Evelyn Harris is crouched over a desk covered with stamps which the previous evening Bullied had steamed off countless old letters.

She sorts them and puts them in plastic folders which Bullied stacks in a cardboard box.

"This is how we're going to finance this place."

He opens a filing cabinet and reveals scores of block sheets of stamps which he's bought over the years.

When times get tough, he says, he uses the stamps as collateral to get loans.

And times are indeed tough now for Bullied and his fledgling hospice for emotionally disturbed and delinquent youths which he opened last December on 23 acres off Mile 17 Road below the Malahat highway.

The hospice, comprising four separate buildings which were once used as a community care facility, has yet to realize its initial goal of 12 residents or students, as Bullied calls them. Its staff of 14 has yet to receive a regular cheque. They remain because they believe in Bullied.

He wishes their confidence could be shared by his potentially two biggest paying customers — the corrections branch and human resources ministry.

But officialdom has been slow in embracing the concept of a free enterpriser like Bullied daring to provide a social service which even by the government's own admission is desperately needed.

It's too expensive, too new, too uncertain of success, the officials argue.

Bullied, 53, a child worker, drug counsellor and author, is totally frustrated.

Wasn't he the creator of the Twin Valley community near Windsor? Wasn't that experiment in teaching youths life skills the most successful program of its kind in Canada?

Why then is he having difficulty here?

He shakes his head.

"It's tough breaking into the system."

What Bullied is attempting is unique in B.C.

The hospice provides a structured residential treatment program for problem youths for whom nothing else has worked.

Its emphasis is on teaching basic survival skills.

"Every animal teaches its young how to survive . . . except humans," Bullied says. "We leave that up to the omnipotent society. But society doesn't do it."

Bullied does. He zeroes in on four areas — food, clothing, shelter and energy — helping his students achieve independence.

"Once you have a sense of independence you have a sense of belonging," he reasons. "You understand what is needed just to survive. The bottom line is we all need one another."

That's the most important lesson his students ever learn. And once they grasp the significance of it, hopefully they will be able to lead more productive, happier lives.

Bullied learned the hard way.

Born and raised in a lower-class ghetto in Montreal, the son of a part-time postman and one of 10 kids, he didn't know what three square meals a day were like until he lied about his age to join the army at 16.

He fought in the Second World War — he was a paratrooper at Normandy on D-Day — and Korea where he was felled by a sniper's bullet.

Hospitalized, he became hooked on morphine and returned to Canada a junkie.

He kicked the habit after four years but continued to wander aimlessly about North America until the mid-60s when he exercised his veteran's option, and even though he had only a Grade 5 formal education, gained admission to the University of Windsor. He graduated in 1971 with an equivalent Master's degree in social psychology.

From his experience in the drug scene, Bullied concluded society's normal ways of handling the drug problems were wrong.

He bought a 100-acre farm near Windsor and opened a drop-in centre for youths trying to kick drugs.

"From my own experience I knew the taking of drugs was a way of getting artificial love and acceptance which the person wasn't getting in real life.

"Drugs were an escape route. To change that you needed a whole new view of looking at life."

The next year Bullied sold the farm and bought another 70 miles north of Windsor which he called Twin Valleys. The centre was operated as an extension of Sinclair College in Windsor.

In the eight years since its inception, about 1,200 youths between 15 and 19, many of them hard-core delinquents, have graduated from the program, with a success rate he estimated at 70 to 80 per cent.

Bullied achieved another kind of personal success, as an author. His first book, People of the Valley, has sold 10,000 copies in Canada. His second, Art of Living, was published a couple of years ago. He's working on a third, Here for a Season, which follows a movie script on Twin Valleys being prepared by 20th Century Fox.

"I got a rule; after seven or eight years you got to move on. It's time then for new direction, new blood."

He came here and opened an office at 825 Bay Street offering group and individual counselling. In July he formed the Life-Centered Learning Hospice (B.C.) Inc., a private company.

Bullied makes no bones his hospice is a business. His per diem rate of $44 is less than half what it costs to keep a child in institutions like the Victoria Detention Home.

He says the human resources ministry has tried to get him to accept the group home rate of $26 a day per person. But he argues he offers far more than simple room and board, the norm at most group homes.

"Our whole program hinges on giving our students education and life skills training. If we can't do that, then what's the point? We can't do anything."

Free enterpriser can't convince the bureaucrats Malahat hospice can help

Store robbed of $200 by youth

City police are looking for a rifle-toting youth who held up the Shelbourne Grocery, 2672 Shelbourne, Friday afternoon and escaped with $200.

Police said the youth, 16 to 18 years old and wearing denims, blue nylon jacket and multi-colored balaclava, entered the store about 3:30 p.m. and ordered the cashier to hand over money in the till.

He fled on a 10-speed bicycle and was last seen heading west on Kings.

Police are unsure if the weapon was a .22-calibre rifle or a pellet gun.

Seller's market continues as home supply down 30%

By AL FORREST

Conditions are improving for home-buyers in Victoria but it's still very much a seller's market.

"The demand for houses continues to be stronger than the supply," Victoria Real Estate Board president Ray Rawnsley said Friday.

While population continues to increase, the number of houses for sale is down about 30 per cent from last year.

"With this strong demand, houses are selling quickly across the region."

The new encouraging signs for the home-buyer:

— Mortgage interest rates are on their way down, currently 15.75 per cent, after having hit 17 per cent.

— Prices, which soared during the first three months, are continuing to rise but at a slower rate.

— The number of listings is increasing with the April total being 560, up 200 from February.

Rawnsley said the improving conditions have led some purchasers to sit back with a "wait-and-see" attitude, hoping the interest rates will go lower and the supply of listings will go even higher.

As a result, there were only 210 sales under the local Multiple Listing Service in March, down from 266 in the same month last year, and 222 sales in April, down from 306 in the corresponding 1979 period.

The lower sales also reflected the fact some financial institutions stopped lending mortgage funds in March when the rates hit 17 per cent, he said.

Now everyone is back in business with the rate down to 15.75 per cent for one-to-three year mortgages.

"People waiting for the rates to go even lower may be fooled," Rawnsley said.

"No one can predict with any certainty but I don't expect the rate to go much lower."

Balanced against this, he said, is the virtual certainty that house prices will continue to rise month by month.

"What people must weigh," he said, "is the chance to save about $1,000 in a year on the mortgage rate but end up paying maybe $3,000 or $4,000 more for the house because the price has gone up."

Rawnsley said the market is improved for all types of houses now that the mortgage rates are dipping.

"When it hit 17 per cent, many people couldn't bid on the type of house they wanted. They either had to wait or settle for something less."

With the rates down a little, the house they want is becoming affordable once again.

The supply of building lots is also increasing, although most of the new ones are quite far out of town.

Central Saanich is the centre of most of the activity while there is also a fairly good supply in North Saanich and Sooke.

He said people will be more eager to buy these lots when they begin to readjust their thinking about driving time.

"We have been spoiled a little in Victoria because it only takes a few minutes to drive anywhere."

One visit to Vancouver, where motorists buck traffic jams from White Rock or Cloverdale, makes Victoria driving look good, he said, even if the drive is from Central Saanich.

The immediate outlook for houses, Rawnsley said, is for an increased supply of listings and prices slightly higher.

The mortgage rate may or may not go lower.

"That is the most difficult factor to predict."

7% increase in new houses

There were 3,766 housing units built on Vancouver Island during 1979, up seven per cent from 3,528 one year earlier, Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation said in its annual report.

Most of the activity was up-Island as the starts in the Victoria area were down 13 per cent for the year. The Victoria figures had been announced earlier.

A V.I. rental survey showed the vacancy rate in November was virtually nil in Nanaimo, 0.1 per cent in Victoria, 4.7 per cent in North Cowichan, 0.8 per cent in Port Alberni, 0.4 per cent in Courtenay-Comox, and one per cent in Campbell River.

Student given top marks for his Marguerite plans

John Atkin's proposal for the spurned B.C. Steamship's Princess Marguerite earned him an A grade in his environmental design class at the Emily Carr College of Art in Vancouver where he has just completed his third year in graphic design.

Whether it will receive the same grade with those who will eventually be charged with deciding the future use of the ship, remains to be seen.

While his proposal is not new — he'd like to see the ship converted into a maritime museum stationed in front of the proposed convention centre — it is one of the most graphically pleasing.

He completed it as an individual project and this week made the rounds dropping off copies to municipal and provincial government offices and business groups.

Atkin notes the ship, built in Scotland in 1948, has more than 50,000 square feet of floor space on five decks that could be used for displays and include two pubs, tearoom and gift shop or gallery on the upper boat deck.

Meanwhile, the role the Victoria Chamber of Commerce will play in deciding the fate of the ship is still up in the air.

Chamber president Cedric Steele said Friday he will raise the question at an in camera meeting of the board of directors next Wednesday.

Steele said the chamber shouldn't be involved in whatever use the ship is put to, but felt the chamber might play a role in at least co-ordinating ideas.

Big water hole to disappear

The long-delayed Rotherham Place development downtown is finally going ahead.

The Vancouver-based developers have taken out a building permit valued at $2.5 million for the first phase of a commercial-office project at Blanshard and Pandora.

For several years, it was just a water-filled hole in the ground surrounded by a blue plywood fence.

The first phase will be built along the Blanshard street frontage. A planning department official at city hall said Friday it will consist of three storeys with a basement parking garage.

Kamloops boys stun mighty Magee

By MAX LOW

To nobody's great surprise, Oak Bay Barbarians won another couple of games Friday to reach today's final of the provincial high school rugby championship tournament. But the Cinderella story of the three-day event at the University of Victoria belonged to the courageous kids from Kamloops who ensured that mighty Magee of Vancouver would not retain the title.

Ranked only No. 3 school in the Okanagan, NorKam Secondary came from behind to win a 10-9 thriller against Mountain School of Langley to finish on top in its group after round-robin play, and then shocked Magee 12-6 in the sudden-death semi-finals.

Gary Johnston's Oak Bay squad had a much smoother path to the final, crushing Prince George 30-3 and then shutting out North Delta 14-0 in the semis.

Magee made it to the last four by beating Centennial of the Fraser Valley 12-6 to take its round-robin group with a 3-0 win-loss record. At the same time, though, NorKam Saints were already raising eyebrows by recovering with a penalty goal and a late try by Bill Guevin to snatch their 10-9 victory (after they'd trailed 9-3 until the last few minutes) over Mountain, the top-ranked Fraser Valley school.

Though they weren't given much chance of toppling Magee, the Kamloops kids played with a kind of wild enthusiasm bordering almost on the fanatic and lived up to their coach's prediction.

"We've been a second-half team all through this tournament," coach Alf Conrad explained early in the semi-final. "So if we can hold them to a low score in the first half, we can take them."

And that's just the way it was.

Despite dominating for most of the half, Magee was frustrated by NorKam's bull-in-a-china-shop tactics and managed only a try by winger Dave Oakley and a conversion by flyhalf Steve Nicol for a 6-0 lead at the interval.

Then, 12 minutes into the second half, NorKam break forward Ian Babcock took a quick penalty kick and dived over for a try. Scrum-half Lorne Hamer-Jackson converted and the game was tied at 6-6.

With only six minutes left on the clock, Hamer-Jackson became the hero of the match when he booted a long penalty goal and, with less than two mimutes remaining, he kicked a drop goal from an incredibly sharp angle.

Realizing a converted try could still tie the game and would, in fact, give the decision to Magee (on the basis of more converted tries scored), the plucky Kamloops players fought desperately to keep their experienced opponents out and the game ended with Magee virtually camped on the Kamloops line but unable to score.

If any school was the heartbreak side of the tourney, though, it was the impressive squad from Kelowna.

The top-ranked Okanagan school thumped Claremont 30-0 and Semiahmoo of White Rock 26-3 Friday to finish in a tie with North Delta in its round-robin group. Both schools had 2-2 win-loss records but North Delta collected the semi-final berth because of a first-round win over Kelowna Thursday.

Claremont won its other match Friday — a 28-12 victory over Prince George — and Mt. Douglas Mountainmen made up a little for losing their first two games Thursday by winning twice on the second day — 23-4 over Lake Cowichan and 31-4 over Mt. Baker of the Kootenays.

In Friday's remaining games, Semiahmoo beat Point Grey of Vancouver 8-4, Centennial downed Mt. Baker 24-10, Mountain defeated Vernon 14-4, Vernon rebounded for a 27-6 win over Lake Cowichan, and Burnaby South lost two games — 16-3 to North Delta and 18-8 to Point Grey.

Being a "second-half team" wasn't restricted to NorKam. Against North Delta, Oak Bay once again found its strength lay hidden somewhere after the interval, leading only 4-0 on a try by winger Barry Woods at the end of the first half but taking over in the second with two fine tries by flyhalf Neil Antolin and winger Peter Skillings and a Mark Wyatt conversion.

The Oak Bay boys were delighted with their win but nothing quite matched the excitement in the NorKam camp where coach Konrad told them they were "guaranteed No.2 and who knows what tomorrow may bring . . ."

And did he think they could spring another surprise and upset Oak Bay?

"I believe we can beat anyone and that's what I'll tell the kids," the happy coach replied. "Obviously, Oak Bay is a talented side and has the experience which we don't. But in a short tournament like this anyone can come through."

Getting odds straight key in any stakes event

After all my years of trying and a head writer fouls it up. The story on the front page of the Times said that this mother didn't know who the father of her offspring was, so she invited the six men who might have been guilty to the christening of her son.

Very nice of her. The six men in question accepted, were named Godfathers and all contributed a name to the heir. Very nice of them. But when the story came out — horrors! — the headline read "It's six to one, he's the dad!"

Not true. All bets are off. The odds are only five to one. You see, if only two admirers were involved, it would be even money (not 2-1) as to who the father might be. Three entries in the paternity stakes would be 2-1; four, 3-1 to one and . . . well, you get the idea.

Let's have the odds right before the mutuels open. The "book" should at least balance or nearly so.

In the case of a six-man field, which obviously is what the lady was playing, the odds on a balanced book prove out at 5-1 for any doubters or head writers who happen to be in the crowd.

For example, take six starters at 5-1. The rule, in calculating bookkeeping percentages, is to add the top and bottom figures of the odds quoted. Divide that total, in this case 6, into 100 and multiply the result by the bottom figure, 1. Answer in each case is 16.66 per cent. Add them up and you have 100 per cent or what is called in the trade a round book.

At 6-1 the book loses. Plenty. Figure it out for yourself. That would be a "Dutch bet" and a smart bettor's delight. He could bet every entry and win.

Incidentally, in making book, a bookmaker sets his own odds (sometimes called the "morning line") because that's his business. He should know his entries and he arranges the book so that theoretically he would have a profit of say five per cent on each race. That would be his remuneration for handling the money, which seems fair enough. That was the case in the old days and still is in Britain and other places today.

Anything over 100 per cent is the margin of profit. For instance, if a bookmaker was making a five-per cent book on a four-horse field it would look something like this.

Horse 1:	9 to 1	10.00%
Horse 2:	6 to 1	14.29%
Horse 3:	7 to 5	41.66%
Horse 4:	3 to 2	40.00%
	Total	105.95%

If the bookmaker wanted to make 10 per cent, he would simply reduce the odds on one of the horses. However, smart bettors would soon realize this and look elsewhere for their action.

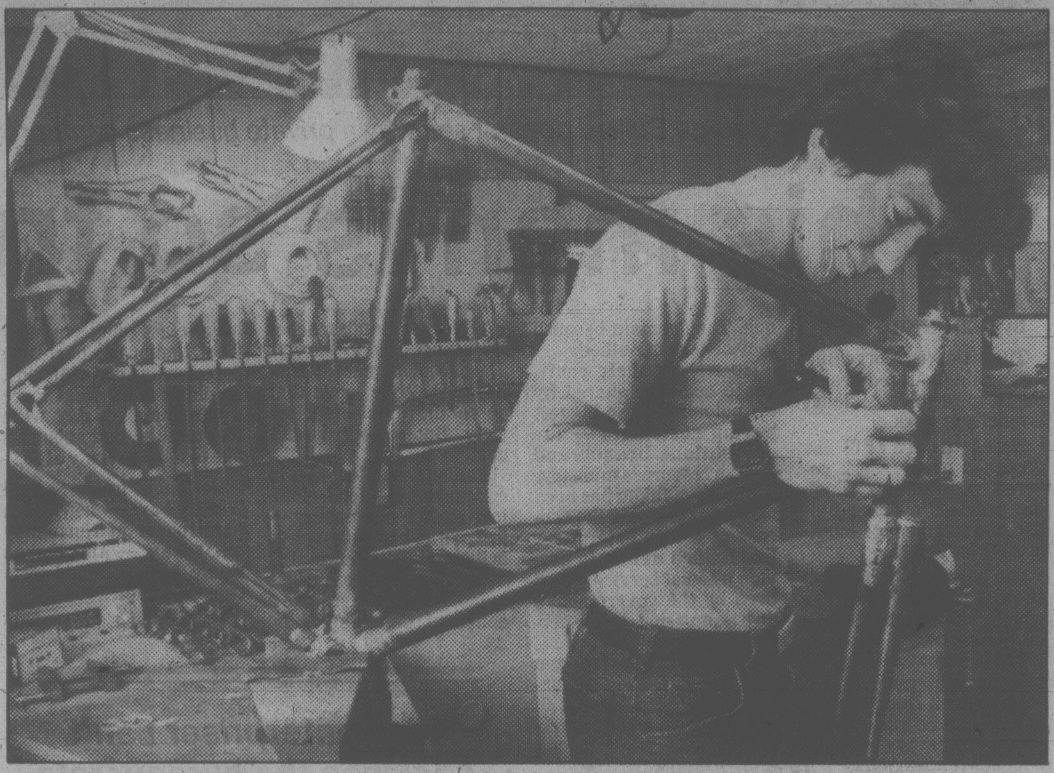
The odds, of course, would change with the wagering patterns, but that's how it begins, and the five per cent edge would always remain. The bookkeeper would see to that. It's different now, of course, but some day when you are studying the "morning line" on a race program (those are the odds quoted alongside the name or number of the horse), check it out. It's one man's opinion of how the starters stack up and should balance or nearly so.

Of course in today's highly computerized world, manual and mental manipulations are done by pressing a button. The old handbook is out and the odds, calculated according to the actual amount bet on each horse in a race in relation to the total amount in the pool, minus allowable deductions, naturally, are flashed on the mutuel board for all to see almost as quickly as the wagers are made.

Still, picking the winner is the name of that game and there always will be doubt.

Just like the happy mother. Off past performances, she knew she had a winner. But, like the horse player, she wasn't sure who.



PRIZE IN THE MAKING is custom-made bicycle that will be top award for junior winner in Sunday's Barney Gingell Memorial Open Race. Bike-builder Stu Cox applies finishing touches to donation made in memory of Gingell, popular cyclist who was killed in traffic mishap a few years ago. Race starts (10 a.m.) and finishes at Centennial Park in Central Saanich. (John McKay photo).

Sabres need more punch

Times News Services

If Buffalo Sabres adopted the attitude that their deficiencies in the first two games were terminal, they might as well not play further in their best-of-seven National Hockey League semifinal series against New York Islanders.

"We just weren't scoring the goals in our first two games in Buffalo," said Sabres' assistant coach Jimmy Roberts. "We came up with a goal in each game, and it's pretty tough to win that way."

"We have to keep our checking game intact and we have to put more pucks in the net," Roberts said as Sabres arrived in Uniondale, N.Y., for the series' third game tonight.

The Islanders won the first two games in Buffalo 4-1 and 2-1 scores, the latter in double overtime.

Also looking to get back on the track are Minnesota North Stars.

Despite a 7-0 blowout at the hands of Philadelphia Flyers in Thursday's second game, Minnesota coach Glen Sonmor says his team is happy with a split in Philadelphia (North Stars won the opener 6-5). The best-of-seven series resumes in Bloomington, Minn., Sunday and continues Tuesday.

"If we had said to you, before we went into Philadelphia, that we were going to win one and come home 1-1, you would have said 'great,'" said Sonmor.

"We have to view the sojourn a success."

Sonmor said he was concerned not so much with the score, which was embarrassing enough, but with the way the Flyers manipulated his team both physically and on the power play.

In order to establish any kind of upper hand, however, the North Stars need to revamp their power play, a segment of their game which stood out during the regular season but was dismal against Philadelphia.

Thursday, Minnesota was 0-6 while the Flyers, dead last in that department during the year, were 4-for-4 in power-play success.

"Our power play was like the Eighth Wonder of the World," said Philadelphia forward Paul Holmgren.

"Our power play has never looked so ineffective in quite some time," Sonmor countered.

The eight are Ivan Thompson, Ranjit Dillon, Bob Cool, Dennis Somner, Norm Baker, Steve Buckley, Scott Marshall, Joe McCrea and, perhaps, Dan Green.

McCrea has a built-in excuse. He has given up playing to coach the Irish.

Titles and cash are on the line for fivepinners

Visions of trophies and cash might be dancing tonight in the heads of many fivepinners who have qualified for the 17th annual Times Bowler-of-the-Year rolloffs.

Fivepin rolloffs get underway at 1 p.m. Sunday at Town and Country Lanes for those who qualified by winning weekly awards in the Times Bowler-of-the-Week competition.

Open to all bowlers competing in regular league play on the southern end of Vancouver Island, the 26-week contest produced weekly winners in each of four divisions — men's and women's fivepins women's and men's tenpins.

Tenpin rolloffs were held last Sunday at Mayfair Lanes with Emmy Plesch taking women's honors and Fred Lobbezoo capturing the men's title.

Winners in the rolloffs are decided on three-game scratch series. If there is a tie for first place, the bowler rolling the highest single game will take the title.

Each rolloff winner receives a Times Trophy and any rolloff champion who is a daily subscriber to the Victoria Times, will collect a bonus prize of $150.

Merchants at home to Pharohs

The Pacific Coast Junior Baseball League has lost one of its teams, but that won't prevent Victoria Merchants from opening their home stand tonight.

Merchants, who allowed only one run in sweeping three games on the mainland last week, were scheduled to open against North Shore. That team, however, withdrew, citing sponsorship problems.

Vancouver Pharohs will pinch-hit, meeting Merchants at 6 at Lambrick Park tonight and again Sunday, at 1 and 3 p.m., at Topaz Park.

North Shore's withdrawal leaves the league with six teams, and league officials are drawing up a new and balanced schedule.

Rob homers

A two-run homer by Rob Coldwell in the fourth inning supplied the edge as as Ingraham Hotel defeated Seaspray Properties 5-3 in Stuffy McGinnis Men's Softball League action at Central Park Friday.

Ingraham 201 200 0— 5 9 0
Seaspray 000 003 0— 3 8 4
Ray Beveridge and Pete Rumsby. Wayne Phillips and Avie Stubbington. HRs: Ing — Rob Coldwell. Sea — Darryl Coldwell, Stubbington.

Mecca for everything that grows! . . .

Woodward the Florist on Fort St. has been around a lot longer than we have . . . since 1892 in fact . . . but we always thought of it as just a place to buy bedding plants and the like . . . Until the other day when the absolutely gorgeous African violets and a window full of incredible cactus . . . much of it blooming . . . led us to go inside . . . what a happy discovery! . . . We found that Woodward's is a real specialty shop . . . That it's now under new management and is in the process of getting an exciting new look . . . Some of the excitement is already here . . . like the attractive "Wedding Corner" where the bride-to-be can sit in peace and quiet with Vera, the wedding expert, and talk about all her floral needs! . . . Baskets of artificial flowers can be rented for the church . . . silk flower bouquets made up in every shape and color combination . . . and of course beautiful fresh flowers artistically arranged by an expert! . . . Woodward's have their own nurseries right here in Saanich from whence come all their gorgeous house plants, bedding plants, exotic blooms like anthurium, orchids, cactus and the aforementioned African violets . . . (One of these in a little basket would make a delightful gift for Mother next Sunday!) . . . And if you never thought of cactus as being beautiful, go see those at Woodward's . . . For you gardeners there are high quality bedding plants . . . a fantastic selection of seeds . . . from the local variety to the world-famous English Sutton seeds . . . Really, Woodward's is a charming store . . . Old-fashioned charm blended with a new modern approach which will draw you like a magnet!. . . Woodward the Florist, 635 Fort St., 384-5614.

Visit Gibson's world of summer whites . . .

We're glued to our typewriter today . . . but outside the sun's shining and the promise of a beautiful summer is all around us! . . . making us think longingly of our visit to Gibson's yesterday! . . . What we looked at was WHITE . . . "Gibson's wonderful world of summer whites!" There are linens . . . silks . . . cottons . . . Sheers and the new European easy-care fabric called polymid . . . Suits and dresses and coats fit for a queen! . . . One white suit with a raw silk look has the new chopper length jacket with simple mandarin collar . . . straight skirt . . . Another is corded silk (20% silk in an easier-care blend) . . . This also has a straight skirt and jacket with long roll collar . . . Both of these are dressy suits which . . . although white . . . could be worn appropriately even at Christmas! . . . Then there are dresses . . . a two-piece dotted sheer with prettily frilled neck and little daisy buttons . . . A white sheer flecked with a tiny pattern . . . a really sweet dress! . . . From France there's a white dress with black polka-dots . . . Short sleeves . . . very French detailing . . . and another French import with the look of boucle . . . We were told at Gibson's that there'll be a lot of white worn this summer . . . in everything from sports to dinner wear, and that detail such as corded belts and picot edging are all very new on white. As for white coats, there's a suave reefer in flannel, with trousers and skirt in the same fabric . . . and white ultrasuedes which belie their luxurious look by their durability and washability! . . . Gibson's, 708 View St., 384-5913.

Pretty new line at Amselles . . .

We can't drop the subject of white without telling you about a couple of white polyester sheer dresses we've just seen at Amselles . . . These are short and dressy . . . and would be something just a little different for the spring or summer bride who's not going the "wedding-gown-and-veil" route! . . . One, a two-piece . . . has a full skirt lined with a heavier sheer, and top with cap sleeves, side jabot and a satin tie belt finished off with a little white flower . . . The other, also a sheer, has long sleeves, plain round neck, gathered padded shoulders and pleated panel attached to the right shoulder and running down to the hem . . . A satin belt on this one too . . . A delightful new line of interchangeable separates by Don Sayres Signatures made its exclusive appearance in Amselles this week . . . In sizes 4 to 10 only . . . there are skirts, pants, jackets with skirt and long sleeves, and two styles of camisoles . . . one buttoning down the side, the other buttoning diagonally across the front. Skirt and in two styles too . . . a straight one with the side slits, and a wrap effect . . . Wrap jacket and shirt style jacket . . . All of these come in three colors . . . Geranium, Meadow Green and Stone, and in three different fabrics: Silk shantung, silk cord and chiffon . . . these latter in stripes of one of the three colors . . . You can mix up all these things no matter what their color or fabric . . . for a really stunning collection of outfits for a small gal! . . . Amselles, 747 Fort St., 386-4422.

A beautiful gift! . . .

One day recently we were stretched out on a chair in Irene's facial treatment room at Cosmetique a la carte . . . revelling in the soothing fragrance of beautifying creams and oils . . . while Irene's knowing fingers fluttered like butterflies over our face and shoulders . . . pressing just the right spots so we could actually feel the tension flowing out of us to be replaced by utter relaxation and a sense of well being and pampering . . . making us feel like a princess in fact . . . when this thought suddenly sprang to mind: Wouldn't such a facial treatment be a wonderful and unique gift for Mother's Day? . . . Many women, we're sure, have never had such a truly delightful experience which not only makes one feel like a million, but look like one too! . . . Irene and Michelle, both of whom are experts in facial treatments, are continually learning more advanced techniques . . . adding to the lovely things they do! For instance they have a new mask which does wonders for rejuvenating the skin . . . firming up and contouring the face . . . We just can't begin to describe the utter bliss . . . and noticeable results of one of these two-hour facial treatments . . . so why not treat your mother to one? . . . And if you really want to do yourself proud, treat her to one of Michelle's incomparable manicures and pedicures too . . . with perhaps a hot wax treatment for making hands soft and supple . . . Now that spring is here, get rid of unsightly body hair by waxing, and facial hairs by painless electrolysis which Jean does to perfection . . . This hair removal goes for men, too! . . . Cosmetique a la carte, 830C Pembroke St., 388-5353.

Sandals with a different look . . .

Rapisardi . . . an Italian shoe manufacturer in the area of Florence, where so many beautiful shoes first see the light of day . . . making nothing but high-grade sandals and thongs . . . so, as you might expect, they've raised this category of shoe-making to little short of an art! . . . Rapisardi sandals have a look all their own . . . and if you want to know what this look is, go to Munday's and see the new models for summer 1980 . . . They're beautifully made . . . Delightfuly lightweight . . . and of course, exclusive to Munday's in Victoria . . . A very popular one is a slide on a high cork wedge with natural string gathered in two knots forming the vamp . . . $55 . . . On a scooped wooden wedge with synthetic sole . . . high pierced vamp of camel calf . . . A pretty slide on a low wooden heel, with leather insole, has a two-tone leaf motif on the bands which form the vamp . . . Bone and camel, or pink and lilac . . . $53 for this charming summer sandal . . . In camel calf there's a fisherman sandal on a low wooden scooped wedge, priced at $44 . . . Now for the thongs to accentuate tanned legs and feet . . . keep you cool when the temperature soars . . . There's a high scooped wooden wedge with beige calf thong . . . and low wooden heel thong in white or camel, both priced at $43 . . . The string, woven instep, and camel slides all come in slim, narrow and medium widths . . . (It's unusual to get slims in sandals) . . . The other Rapisardis come in narrow and medium . . . at . . . Munday's, 1203 Douglas St., 383-2211.

Sweeties for Mother on her day . . .

Mirror, mirror on the wall, who's the sweetest of them all? . . . mothers, of course . . . Young mothers, old mothers, oft-times mothers-inlaw, despite the way they're sometimes maligned! . . . Something sweet and delectable from Purdy's is bound to give pleasure to any mother next Sunday, May 11 . . . so do pop into one of their stores this coming week and pick up some chocolates, candies or nuts to help make Mother's Day special! . . . If you know mother's favorites, Purdy's will be happy to make up special boxes . . . in any size you like, and wrap the box up prettily to boot . . . Purdy's "Yard Long" boxes of assorted chocolates invariably make a hit with everyone who's lucky enough to receive one . . . And then there are delectable-looking trays with acetate tops, filled with assorted chocolates, or chocolates and nuts. These come in large 2-lb. trays, and in smaller 1-lb. trays . . . also with assorted chocolates or chocolates and nuts combined . . . The big "Family Pack" is an ideal Mother's Day gift . . . large enough so she can share her goodies with all the family and still have lots left for herself! . . . It consists of one large and two smaller trays in a large container . . . with chocolates, nuts, and chocolate slabs . . . Other suggestions are chocolate-coated almonds, filberts, brazils and cashews at . . . Purdy's, Hillside Shopping Centre, 595-1241, Mayfair Mall, 385-5032 and Empress Hotel, 385-3555.

Three explanations for 'forbidden stitch'

I was recently at an exhibition of Chinese embroideries. Some were quite old, but many of them were contemporary, which I found quite interesting. While they followed along the tradional lines of design, there was a fresh new appeal to the modern day embroideries.

It's interesting that each culture has it's own stylized themes symbolic of their country and heritage. With the Chinese it's the chrysanthemum and the dragon, while at the recent King Tut exhibit, I noticed that the Lotus bud and vulture as well papynus flower were among other symbolic designs.

The North American Indian features the eagle and snowflake, as well as the sun, moon and stars. This of course is a very brief example.

But to get back to the Chinese embroideries, I am often asked what is the forbidden stitch? The tiny close stitching resembles French knots, usually this stitching is only on very old pieces.

Legend has it that the forbidden stitch got it's name when the Emperor outlawed it, because his wife convinced him that the tiny close stitching was causing many women to become blind.

A less romantic story attributes the name of the stitch to the fact that it was common in Peking, which contains the Forbidden City.

Another theory is that only royal robes and embroideries were allowed to be worked in this stitch. In other words it was forbidden to be used by the rank and file!

If you are lucky enough to possess a piece of Chinese embroidery, it will be quite valuable, so why not have it framed for all to admire. Since the U.S. has resumed trade and diplomatic relations with China, the Chinese designs and theme are tremendously chic.

Divorces 'too soon' cause breakups

LONDON, Ont. (CP) — The reason for the soaring number of marriage breakdowns isn't necessarily that couples get married too young, but that they get divorced too soon, says a U.S. psychologist.

Dr. Alan Gurman, of the University of Wisconsin, said at the annual meeting of the Ontario Association for Marriage and Family Therapy that too many people take the easy way out of marriage problems.

Gurman said he would like couples in difficulty to have at least 10 sessions with a professional therapist before being able to get a divorce.

Couples should "have to work at a divorce, not just escape with it," he said.

Current attitudes suggest that if marriage isn't going perfectly it should be changed quickly, but "sticking in there" may be beneficial to a marriage in the long run.

Couples should make a point of regularly discussing their problems and expectations.

Is love a killer?

HALIFAX (CP) — You may not die of love, but intense emotional stimulus can cause heart damage, say researchers at Dalhousie University.

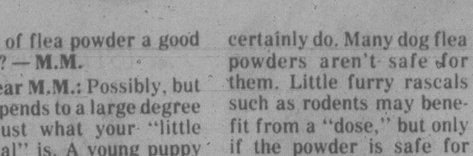
Dr. A. G. Klassen, cardiologist and head of the biophysics and physiology department, says a study of coronary veins which are controlled by the sympathetic nerve has shown how emotions directly affect the heart's function.

"Anticipation of extra physical effort is achieved by the nerves telling the heart to work harder," he said. "We have found that if the force is excessive, or the emotional stimulus of the sympathetic nerve too intense, then the heart can be damaged."

The findings were made by Dr. David Hopkins, a psychologist, Dr. Klassen and Dr. Andrew Armour.

Bigger dog, bigger appetite

By DR. FRANK MILLER



Dear Dr. Miller: A dog is to be my next purchase. I'd kind of like a big one, but I can't afford terribly big feed bills. In talking with people about this, they tell me that a big dog doesn't really eat much more than a little one. This is good news to me. Why does it work this way? — H.B.

Dear H.B.: Bad news. It doesn't. The theory behind this false philosophy is that a little dog, being active, will simply burn up more calories for his size than a big dog who lies around a lot. Even if they do, they still consume considerably more calories (which is food, which is money). Even if, say, a 15-pounder consumes one and a half times the number of calories per pound of body weight, it simply isn't going to consume as much food as, say, a 70-pounder. Should that big dog be something like, say, a hyperactive Irish setter, it can easily equal, on a pound per pound basis, the calorie consumption of that bouncy little one.

The bottom line to all this is a big dish for the big dogs, filled with food that today is expensive. One of the best ways, then, to cut your dog dollars for food is to start and end with a smaller canine consumer.

Dear Dr. Miller: My cat Barley never meows. Why not? — B.C.

Dear B.C.: Maybe Barley never has anything to talk about, or maybe it's just that the rest of the cats he knew when he was young and impressionable were sort of silent, too. There's also the possibility, but by no means a probability, that his "meower" actually doesn't work and never has. Regardless of the cause, odds are Barley's body language allows him to convey any message that's really necessary.

Dear Dr. Miller: I had bad luck with two birds. Both lost toes and were losing their feet from gangrene. I had to have them put to sleep. I'm thinking about getting a snake instead. Are they sickly? — A.U.

Dear A.U.: The biggest problem with many snakes is setting them up with the proper environment and menu so they'll eat adequately. They're not particularly fragile or prone to disease. You can count on a pet snake being completely free from foot problems . . .

Dear Dr. Miller: If you think your little rascal has a flea but can't find it, is a dose of flea powder a good idea? — M.M.

Dear M.M.: Possibly, but it depends to a large degree on just what your "little rascal" is. A young puppy may require a milder flea powder and approach than would an adult dog. Cats certainly do. Many dog flea powders aren't safe for them. Little furry rascals such as rodents may benefit from a "dose," but only if the powder is safe for cats and kittens. In any case, powder should be used carefully, even on a one-time basis, as a powdery cloud of the stuff can cause irritation (to eyes and respiratory tract particularly).

Dear Dr. Miller: Do pet chinchillas ever get ear infections? If they do, do you have to pack them into the vet, or can you cure them all right at home? — S.K.

Dear S.K.: Pack them in, pronto. Chinchillas, including the occasionally pettable ones, are susceptible to potentially fatal ear infections and need prompt professional care.

abby

Dear Abby:

A reader complained, "Although my boyfriend is very affectionate, I wonder why he never says, 'I love you.' "

You replied, "Perhaps he isn't ready to make a commitment yet." Abby, I am definitely ready to make a commitment to my girlfriend, but I, too, find it very difficult to say, "I love you."

In college, I had a Japanese roommate who said, "If a Japanese boy were to tell a girl he 'loved' her, she would become very uncomfortable and wonder what he expected of her in return. Oriental men express their affection in more subtle ways — such as doing nice things for a girl, or giving her small gifts."

He also said that when North American couples kiss in public in Japan, it causes a great deal of embarrassment and curiosity among the Japanese, who are unaccustomed to such a display of emotion in public.

I think we Westerners would do well to adopt the Oriental custom of keeping one's emotions under control.

Z.A.R.

Dear Z.A.R.:

It's true that controlling one's emotions certainly would reduce the incidence of accidents among the Occidents, as it does among the Orientals. But it will never play in Peoria — or Paris, or Palm Springs, or Passaic.

Dear Abby:

This is for the woman who admits to being 65 pounds overweight, but insists that she is "happy, popular, good-looking, well-dressed, and couldn't care less what other people think." If she really believed this, she is not being honest with herself, so how can she be honest with others?

I have yet to meet an obese person who was totally honest. Generally speaking, they cheat on diets, lie about how much they eat and what they weigh; they even lie about having a "thyroid" condition.

Men prefer feminine women, and there's nothing feminine about hippos. They can't walk ladylike, they can't sit ladylike, and God forbid they should ever have to run! And if they were to see a moving picture of themselves walking away from the camera, they would never wear tight pants in public again!

In case you think I'm a skinny person with no understanding of the fat person's pain, let me assure you that I am a former fatty who is constantly fighting the battle of the bulge.

Been There

Dear Been There:

Not all fat people fit your stereotype. Some are honest, self-confident and able to accept themselves as they are. Witness "The National Association to Aid Fat People," a newly formed organization dedicated to fighting discrimination against the obese and to assuring them that fat is fine and nothing to be ashamed of.

Dear Abby:

I am a grandmother, and as one might expect, I am placed in competition with the other grandmother. I don't believe in buying my grandchildren's love by bringing them presents ever time I go to see them. However, the other grandmother does, which is her privilege. We all live in the same city.

The grandchildren have been conditioned (by the other grandma) to expect a gift every time a grandparent visits. I really love them, but I want them to be glad to see me for myself — not for what I bring them.

I become slightly irritated when the little ones invariably come running to greet me with, "What did you bring me?" I refuse to submit to this subtle form of blackmail. Any suggestions?

No Gift Granny

Dear Granny:

Your grandchildren will soon be conditioned to expect no gifts from you. Hang in there and concentrate on cultivating their love in other ways until their values mature — as they will in time.

Plastic cup may be hazard

your health

By DR. L.L. COLEMAN

I read somewhere that drinking hot tea out of a styrene plastic cup could be dangerous. At the place where we work we drink hot soups, coffee and tea from these cups all the time. Do you think we should discontinue this?

Miss B.I.L.

Dear Miss L.:

A number of readers have written about their concern in using these cups. Apparently, the first report was a confusing one. Consequently, anxiety developed without anyone having given a real explanation of what actually was the problem.

It all started when Dr. Michael Phillips, of the University of Connecticut, wrote a letter to the prestigious New England Journal of Medicine. In it he said, "While drinking tea with lemon in the cafeteria, I noticed that the interior of the polystyrene cup was dissolving before my eyes and even perforating in places."

Dr. Phillips became concerned because a previous study had suggested that polystyrene might be cancer-forming in experimental animals. An experiment was then performed in which hot tea was poured into 16 polystyrene cups. A slice of lemon with rind was added to eight of the cups. After 15 minutes, the cups with the lemon tea showed definite erosion of the inner surface.

The manufacturer of these plastic cups quickly responded to this threat to their product. A spokesman said, "It has long been known that limonene, a substance found in lemon rind, tends to soften polystyrene. But," he continued, "the amount released in one slice of lemon is so negligible that it does not create a problem as far as the cup's integrity is concerned."

Undoubtedly, some of the polystyrene is dissolved in this erosion process. Although there is no definitive, confirmatory evidence that the dissolved polystyrene is either toxic or cancer-forming, I personally would prefer to drink my soups and tea out of a more stable container until all the ongoing studies conclusively show that no possible danger exists.

Dr. Coleman welcomes questions from readers. Please write to him in care of the Times, 2621 Douglas St., Victoria, V8W 2N4.

THE 1980 WEST COAST COMPUTER CHAMPIONSHIP

A great deal of the computer industry is now centred at various points along the West Coast, so what more natural than a West Coast Computer Championship? It was held earlier this spring at Brooks Hall in San Francisco, and I was called upon at the last minute to be the tournament director.

There were five entries (a sixth failed to show) and I soon found it a quite different experience from conducting an old-fashioned "human" (as the computers call us) match. For one thing, the machines don't show as much temperament. For another, they sometimes got confused in unusual ways. For example, in the third round, the two Atari entries inadvertently switched boards and met the wrong opponents.

The winner was Mychess by John Urwin of San Jose who (which) scored 3½ points out of 4; last place went to another San Jose entry, Voice by Jim Walker, which (who) scored only 1. Here's their game:

WHITE: Mychess
BLACK: Voice

New regulations govern movement of hazardous goods

OTTAWA (CP) — A bill designed to prevent disasters in the transportation of hazardous goods by rail, truck, ship or air was given prompt approval in principle in the Commons.

The legislation provides uniform safety standards for shipment of dangerous materials.

The bill was given second reading as a judicial inquiry continues into the derailment of a train in Mississauga, Ont., in November, which forced the evacuation of the city's population of 250,000.

The disaster of large chlorine release was averted, but MPs agreed the accident focused public attention on the danger involved in moving such material and increased the pressure to implement protective legislation.

"While I cannot assert that this legislation will prevent such accidents, I believe the growing awareness will result in a great public support for this legislation," Transport Minister Jean-Luc Pepin said.

Under the Liberal legislation, inspectors would be given broad powers to act both in overseeing routine shipments and taking charge in the event of an emergency.

Pepin said the bill is aimed at creating a single legislative authority on the transportation of dangerous goods to override the many pieces of legislation at the provincial and municipal levels which have led "to a certain amount of confusion and a great deal of conflict."

Do's and don'ts for healthy rhododendrons gardening

jack beastall

The rhododendron is no longer a plant considered to be suitable only to large wooded estates. It is now seen in the smallest of gardens and in some apparently unlikely locations.

Most of us buy a rhododendron on impulse; we cannot resist when we see a plant smothered with blooms, but we soon have a lot of questions that need answering.

From the point of view of the gardener seeking advice it is probably unfortunate that over 800 species have been found in the wild since the first introduction in the mid-eighteenth century. The thousands of hybrids resulting from cross-breeding of these plants further complicates matters.

The name is a combination of two Greek words, 'rhodon' meaning 'a rose' and 'dendron' meaning 'a tree', hence the Rose-tree, which aptly describes the 40 to 60-foot plants found in Asia.

In the genus Rhododendron we find species only six-inches high; the Azalea division to four feet; compact plants; straggly plants to ten feet; leaves from one-inch to three-feet in length, and several distinct flower shapes.

Such a motley crowd could give rise to many questions, a frequent one being why a plant is tall and leggy, with only bunches of leaves at the end of the shoots while a neighbor's plant that looks similar is compact and covered with foliage.

Today we need a Rhododendron Handbook to find the answers. The handbook is comparable to a stamp catalogue, increasing in size each year as new introductions are added. However, a small amount of knowledge and a large amount of common sense will result in reasonable success.

Local gardeners are fortunate in being able to visit parks and private gardens to view large collections, also the Butchart's Gardens and the University of Victoria collection at the campus.

Locally we grow the kinds with leaves that are small, about one-inch in length, to those with leaves about eight inches in length, but we cannot strictly follow the oft repeated rule that "the longer the leaves the deeper the shade to prevent foliage damage."

The small leaved varieties (such as the azalea group) we grow in full sun. If we place our plants with larger leaves in too much shade, we have beautiful foliage but few flowers, so we settle for full sun of the dappled partial shade of high trees, and forgo the beauty of the foliage.

All rhododendrons, and that includes the division containing the so-called azaleas, are surface rooting and will not flower if planted too deeply. The top of the soil in the container, over the root-ball should be set level with the surroundig surface soil. Weeds are always removed on the hands and knees with a small stainless-steel garden fork because digging or deep cultivating will damage the roots and may kill the plant.

Until the plant is large enough to have sufficient foliage to shade the root area, a surface mulch is needed for root protection from scorching summer sun and to keep the soil around the surface roots cool.

For this mulch we use screened compost directly over the soil plus the rough screenings on top, to a depth of about one-inch, not any deeper. This is applied early in spring (mid-April this year) to prevent the natural soil water table from sinking too deep and allowing the roots to become dry and wither.

Rhododendrons require some fertilizer each year, a complete balanced mix of the acid type (Rhodo-Azalea Mix, sold in small boxes) with a low first and last figure in the formula and high middle figure for good roots, plentiful flowers, and for some plants the seeds, such as 6-8-6 or 5-10-5.

Young plants, for the first three years in the garden, are given three small feedings (one-third the total amount recommended at 30 day intervals) using about one-half-cupful for every foot in height at each feeding and applied betwen mid-March and mid-May. The plants are well watered before applying the fertilizer and the crystals dampened with a light spray of water to dissolve the crystals. The next day, another complete watering sufficient to carry the nutrients to the bottom of the root area. Never allow fertilizer on the foliage; wash it off immediately.

Established plants, after the third year in the garden, receive the same fertilizer mix at about one half the amount suggested on the package for every foot in height in late March. These have had their feeding for this year.

It is important that these fertilizer quantities be distributed as evenly as possible over the entire root area, otherwise one side of the plant may flower and not the other. No matter how small the amount it must be spread over the whole root area.

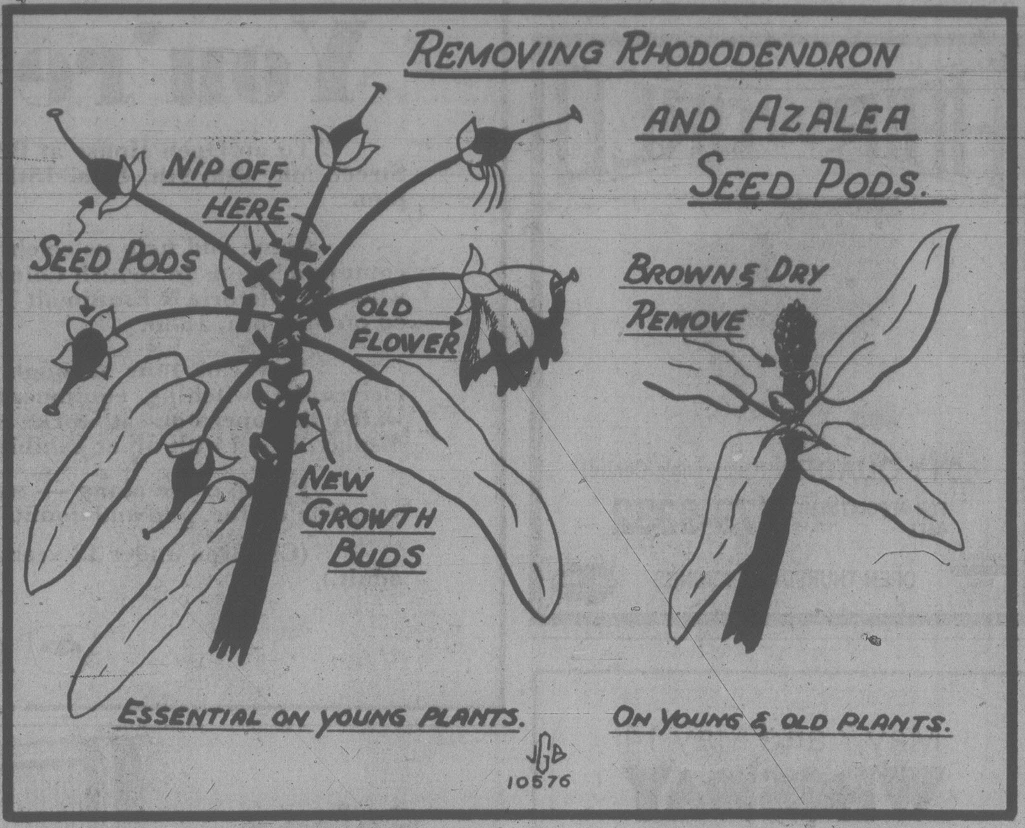
Any fertilizer reaching the roots later in the season from an adjacent lawn, border, or vegetable patch, will cause soft growth to continue into fall with the chance it will be too late to ripen and form flower initials, and be severely tip killed in a cold spell over winter.

Rhododendrons naturally inhabit areas of high rainfall, up to 100 inches a year, and that is why they do so well in gardens on the west coast of Vancouver Island where some beautiful collections may be seen. This is about 2540 mm of rain a year on the metric scale, therefore they need plentiful watering in our dryer summer months, especially in late summer and early fall when the flower initials are forming for the following year's display.

The seed pods and faded blooms must be removed to save energy being put into the making of useless seed. The illustration shows where the old flower stems are nipped off with the thumb and finger, or carefully cut with scissors or secateurs, taking care not to damage the new growth buds immediately below the stems which are the flower initials for next year's display.

Gardeners who cut off long tips of blooms for indoor decoration or for giving to friends, have few if any flowers the following year, as happens when the fastidious gardener shears the bushes into nice little round mounds. Only dead wood (die-back) or winter kill is removed from rhododendrons and azaleas. This can be done at any time of year, cutting back to clean white pith.

Flower buds, or tips at end of growths, that fail to develop flowers or wither, turn brown, and make no new growths, should be cut off as shown in the illustration without damaging the new growth buds below, because they have a hormone secretion which prevents the new growth buds from developing until the flower buds have opened, or the growth bud made new growths.



Work for week

Check hyacinths, daffodils and other narcissi, also tulips to remove all old flower heads to prevent seeding and consequent weakening of bulb. Give light feeding of bulb fertilizer (4-10-10) if none given previously.

Also remove faded flower trusses rhodos, camellias, azaleas as today's article. Mulch root area with wet peatmoss after good watering. Dryness at roots now will spoil next year's display.

As carnations, border pinks and other dianthuses begin showing flower stems during next week or 10 days, remove each low down on plant to get stronger bigger plant and more robust blooms in June and July. A dressing of wood ash is a tonic for these plants now.

Transplant tomato plants into large containers to continue growing strongly (without fertilizer) until they can be put into garden. Put outdoors on warm day, and in at night until later in month.

Sow cucumber, musk melon, and squash seeds in small containers indoors, to prevent need for disturbance of roots. These plants do not make rapid strong growth if disturbed. Later move complete plants into larger containers before final move to garden.

Don't move house plants outdoors yet; nights frequently border on frost.

Brains no payoff for postal job

CALGARY (CP) — If you're not too smart, you can probably land a job at Calgary's mail processing plant.

Officials at the plant have found that hiring people with demonstrated intelligence doesn't pay off — they often quit as soon as something better comes along.

Until a month ago, applicants had to successfully complete a reasoning-and-memory test before being considered for employment in the large plant.

But that test has been dropped because the post office felt it screened out the type of workers best-suited for the often-boring mail-handling and sorting jobs.

"The people doing well on this test were university and college graduates fresh out of school," said Bob Fletcher, public affairs officer for the post office in Calgary.

"They were used to doing this type of test, so did very well. But they were the type of workers who didn't stay on the job very long."

The only test given to applicants now is for dexterity to determine whether applicants have the ability to work on mechanized sorting equipment.

But failing the dexterity test does not mean losing out on a job since there are many work areas where dexterity doesn't matter.

All postal applicants must appear before a four-member selection board which makes the final decision on hiring. Once hired for a specified job, the new postal employee enters a comprehensive training program which combines time spent on the job with school-room learning at the postal plant's training school.

Because of the high turnover in Calgary, two full-time instructors were appointed last June to handle the mammoth task of keeping the plant manned.

If hired as an operator on the mechanized sorting equipment, the new employee must train for at least 80 hours in the training school before moving out to the plant. Before leaving the school, however, the worker has to show the ability to process 1,000 letters an hour with a 99-per-cent accuracy rate.

Money orders uncashed

CALGARY (CP) — An estimated 620,000 postal money orders weren't cashed last year and that's all gravy for the post office.

No one can say why so many people didn't cash in the slips for their money but postal officials suggest some may have lost the money orders or just tucked them away in a drawer and forgotten about them.

And perhaps some were just lost in the mail.

The post office does not keep a record of how much "free" money it collects on uncashed money orders but it is probably substantial since the total value of money orders sold last year exceeded $1.2 billion.

That profit is in addition to $10.8 million in money order fees which account for 1.1 per cent of the post office's revenue.

Money orders are no longer valid after a year, but claims to the post office on outdated money orders are considered, said Pat Dickson, post office public affairs officer in Ottawa.

Bee mystery solved on high

EDMONTON (CP) — A secret flight Tuesday from Phoenix, Ariz., has answered many questions about the deaths of five million honey bees on another flight earlier in April.

Overheating and overcrowding were to blame for the deaths of the bees, intended for beekeepers in the Calgary and Edmonton area, said Ken Orletsky of Bee World Inc. in Phoenix.

Alberta government officials at the time told Orletsky, the shipper, a thermal accident during the flight from Phoenix resulted in the deaths.

The bees were being flown from Arizona to replenish depleted stocks. Beekeepers kill a large number of bees each fall because it is cheaper than feeding them through cold Alberta winters. It was the first time a large shipment had been sent by air.

To test the overheating theory a shipment of 60 packages of bees with 10,000 bees in each package, was flown to Calgary Tuesday, along with electronic monitoring devices.

Orletsky, in a telephone interview Wednesday from Phoenix, said a United States department of agriculture worker was on board the flight to monitor the bees.

He termed the latest flight "100-per-cent successful."

The agriculture official tested the cargo hold temperature throughout the flight and the empty hold on the return flight to Arizona, Orletsky explained.

The April 16 deaths were caused by loading the bees at high temperatures — 34 degrees Celsius — in Arizona and overcrowding in the cargo hold.

Midnight feller ravages park

EDMONTON (CP) — Hundreds of trees along the river bank were destroyed last weekend, says Mike Patton of the city's parks and recreation department.

"It's just devastating. The river valley is so beautiful and this sort of thing just drives me crazy."

Patton speculated that the culprit or culprits sawed the trees to get a better view of the river valley. Some area residents had asked the city to thin the trees so they would not obscure the view.

He said the trees included Poplars, Saskatoons and Willows along Valleyview Drive.

Eaton home sold

WINNIPEG (CP) — A Saskatchewan contractor is about to buy a stately Winnipeg home which has had such diverse owners as the Eaton retail family and a massage parlor owner.

Sale price of the six-bedroom Tudor home on Wellington Crescent along the Assiniboine River hasn't been revealed because the transfer of title isn't expected to occur until next week.

However, real estate agent Richard Wood said the house was listed for $650,000, including contents, in late 1978.

The purchaser is Lloyd Engel of Regina.

Joy is regional

CALGARY (CP) — Two books banned in Winnipeg this week have yet to raise a blush in Calgary.

Winnipeg police ordered The Joy of Gay Sex and The Joy of Lesbian Sex taken off bookstore shelves after receiving a complaint about the "earthy language" and sketches of intimate couplings contained in the books.

But in Calgary police officials say they are taking no action at this time to have the books removed from local stores.

Record dry spells

WINNIPEG (CP) — There were no April showers in most of Manitoba.

As a result, new records were established in some communities for the longest spring dry spell, a spokesman for the Winnipeg weather office said.

There was no measurable precipitation reported in Winnipeg for 34 days, eclipsing the 33-day record established in 1882.

In northern Manitoba communities, temperatures have also been soaring to new highs.

Gunslinger wanted by Winnipeg

WINNIPEG (CP) — The city of Winnipeg is looking for a gunslinger.

The job pays $4,000 a year and applicants must be early risers and immune to a great deal of verbal abuse. Being fleet-footed is an asset.

The hired gun is expected to hunt down and kill between 2,000 and 3,000 pigeons each year. The birds are considered a nuisance and they pose a health problem.

It's a dirty job, says the man who was the city's resident pigeon killer for about 20 years. And he isn't recommending it to anyone.

Almost two years ago the 50-year-old civic employee hung up his guns.

"I was tired of the abuse I had to take all the time and I was tired of the early mornings," said the man who asked not to be identified.

"It's a rotten job and I'm glad to be out of it."

The problem, he said, is he had to get up at 3 a.m. so he could shoot the birds when there weren't many people around.

"After that you have to go to you regular job. It was getting too tough to handle."

During his long tenure, he was jeered, taunted, sworn at and even attacked — all in the line of duty.

The man, who had been a competitive shooter, said he "fell into the job" because there were no volunteers.

When complaints about pigeons began to pour into city hall, he would go out into the early morning darkness and stalk the feathered culprits.

Armed with a .22-calibre rifle and low-velocity ammunition, he would hunt his prey.

His aim was deadly and police, who were informed of his activities, say there were no reports of property damage from a missed shot.

"I broke a window once," the man confessed. "A dead bird fell through it."

Lab work, cancer link?

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — The U.S. energy department has named a scientific committee to investigate the abnormally high incidence of a virulent cancer among workers at the Lawrence Livermore Laboratory of atomic weaponry.

Between 1972 and 1977, health specialists found that the 19 melanoma cases reported at the lab represented a rate five times greater than the incidence among the general population.

Project North worker honored

Activist journalist to be feted by city

After nearly five years on staff with Project North, an inter-church coalition formed to meet the challenges of massive northern development confronting native aboriginal rights, Hugh McCullum will move in June to the desk of The United Church Observer.

Born and raised in the Yukon, McCullum has been a journalist for most of his adult life with newspapers in Montreal, Toronto, Kingston and Regina. For eight years prior to his appointment to Project North, he was editor of Canadian Churchman, national monthly of the Anglican Church of Canada.

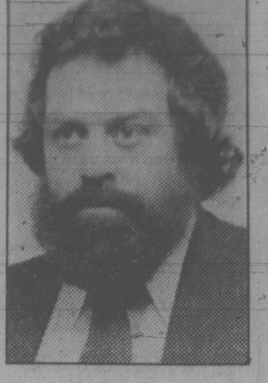
More recently he has co-authored two books; This Land is Not For Sale and Moratorium, and has been widely published in Canadian journals.

McCullum will be in Victoria Saturday, May 10, for two events sponsored by the Victoria Project North group, one of more than 60 local committees across the country.

At 9:30 a.m. in St. George's Church Hall, 3909 St. George's Lane (off Maynard in Cadboro Bay) he will discuss an application made to the Indian affairs and northern development ministry to build an oil pipeline from Norman Wells, N.W.T., down the Mackenzie Valley to central Alberta, where it would link with pipelines to eastern Canada and U.S.A.

One of the few whites in northern Canada to have gained the acceptance and trust of the native people, he was present two weeks ago at a meeting in Rae Lakes, N.W.T., of 200 chiefs, councillors and delegates from every community in the Mackenzie Valley, where a unanimous resolution was passed that the pipeline not be approved before native rights have been negotiated and implemented, a main factor in the 10-year moratorium declared following the Berger Inquiry.

Also on the morning's program is a presentation by Nishga Tribal Council president James Gosnell and Alan Passarell, MLA for Atlin, on B.C. Hydro's plans for development in northern B.C.



McCULLUM
. . . dinner guest

At 7 p.m. the same day, McCullum will be guest of honor at an appreciation dinner where Gosnell will be the special speaker, significant because the Nishga were the first native people to ask the churches to become involved in these issues.

Since that time, Project North has been approached by and worked with Council for Yukon Indians, Dene Nation and Inuit Tapirisat of N.W.T., Northern Manitoba Flood Committee, Grand Council of Treaty Nine, and Labrador native groups.

The Saturday morning workshop is open to anyone interested at no charge. For information regarding the dinner phone 383-7614 or 479-6866 today.

Offerings spread afar

The disaster and famine relief offering scheduled at the Victoria Seventh-day Adventist Church Saturday, May 10, has the membership thinking big.

"When the price of shoes in some countries represents the total family income for an entire month, it makes one think seriously about peoples' physical needs," said the leader of the Adventist welfare program in B.C., Walter Rogers.

"Some members have skipped a few meals, while others have foregone personal luxuries so their contributions would be large this year," he said.

The members' humanitarian concern for individuals in 58 countries helped provide food, clothing, bedding, and medical supplies valued at $13.7 million last year. They also shared in giving the $45,000 used to rehabilitate those hit by tornados and floods in Canada country.

The church's community services centre, at 1462 Hillside, co-operates with Seventh-day Adventist World Services, Inc. Clothing processed by members here as well as at other Adventist centres throughout North America totalled two million pounds last year.

The 24 million pounds of food sent to 133,000 needy families in Peru would not have been possible if members in Victoria had not shared. S.A.W.S. also sent medical supplies valued at $1.9 million and donated by international pharmaceutical companies to hospitals in 33 countries.

The school feeding and mother-child education, part of an ongoing educational program in Haiti, is projected to reach some 50,000 individuals this year.

The Victoria and Sidney Seventh-day churches are sponsoring a "boat family" from Vietnam. Furniture, household effects, and clothing were collected for them.

"Besides this family, we have helped other boat family members brought to us by other organizations," said Edythe White, director of the Victoria SDA centre.

She added that one "boat family mother" returned for a layette when her new baby was born.

Consignments of clothes have also been sent to Africa and the Philippines from Victoria.

Cable 10 carrying ceremony

Cable 10 Victoria will broadcast complete coverage of the consecration of the new bishop for the Anglican diocese of British Columbia Sunday at 1 p.m. The broadcast will be repeated on Wednesday, May 7, at 9 p.m.

Archdeacon Hywel Jones became bishop of the diocese in a consecration ceremony at Christ Church Cathedral on Thursday evening.

Jones was rector of St. Mary's in Oak Bay for 24 years.

St. Stephen's offers pastoral setting for ceremony

Animal blessing Sunday

A service sponsored by the Victoria branch of the SPCA will mark the beginning of Be Kind to Animals Week to be held May 4-10 in the interests of animal welfare.

The Rev. Ivan Futter will officiate at the ceremony Sunday, 2:30 p.m., at St. Stephen's Anglican Church, Mount Newton Cross Road, Saanichton.

Children are encouraged to bring their pets to be blessed.

If the weather is suitable, the service may be held outside the church (it has been the last three years); otherwise it will be in the church itself.

Be Kind to Animals Week is held annually the first week in May and a similar service is held in many parts of Canada and England.

Its purpose is to bring the welfare of live creatures before the public, especially young people.

Joseph Heald, British Columbia director for the SPCA, says the area has a monthly unwanted animal population of about 120 and 200 cats.

"How do we know? Because those are the numbers we must humanely euthanize each month. These are the lucky ones.

"The unlucky ones are those that are left to stray and come in to us as injured animals, hit by cars or otherwise abused. There are also those that are mistreated or neglected and left without food or water. Some people do not realize their responsibilities toward the animals they own."

Heald says that during Be Kind to Animals Week it is the aim of all humane societies to inform the public of its responsibilities and to encourage people to be kind to animals.

"The public, starting with our children, needs to be informed and during this week special emphasis will be given to this problem."

During the week there will also be a display in the Hillside Mall of an animal ambulance along with literature and information on animal care. There will be information on spaying and neutering of animals to encourage people to reduce the unwanted animal population.

Perspectives

By REV. J.A. DAVIDSON

Two American psychiatrists, Dr. O.S. English and Dr. G.H.J. Pearson, discussing the emotional bases of marriage in their influential textbook, Emotional Problems of Living, make this statement: "Probably no life event of equal importance is viewed with as little realism as marriage."

It is unrealistic to think that two imperfect persons can somehow make a perfect marriage, providing certain emotional conditions previal. Much of our popular culture encourages young people in the quaint belief that when a young man and a young woman experience that complexity of emotions and sentiments commonly designated as "being in love with one another," it is only necessary for them to have the knot tied to ensure that for ever afterwards everything will be simply wonderful.

But perfect marriage, marriage without serious stresses and strains and problems, is a figment of an excessively romantic imagination. As someone has put it, "Romantic love is good for getting people married, but not for keeping them married."

Romantic love can provide the initial impetus for happy marriage, but, after that impetus spends itself, something more is required. Romantic love, no matter how strongly it is experienced, is in itself no guarantee of ongoing and maturing compatibility.

Love does change in marriage—and as it changes one of two things happens. In some marriages, the love on which they are founded gradually becomes rather flabby, and there is little else to keep the relationship strong. Many marriages founder because they run out of emotional steam.

The other thing that can happen is that the love, although losing some of its initial intensity and excitement, becomes deeper and stronger. But this happens on when it is unselfish, outgoing love, not a selfish, ingrowing caricature of love. The distinction here is pointed up in the words of Paul Ramsey, a writer in the field of Christian ethics: " 'I love you' may simply mean in all sorts of subtle ways, 'I love me, and I want you.' "

Much of what passes for love is actually self-love: it is basically selfish, and seeks self-satisfaction at the expense of the other person. Authentic love is basically unselfish, self-denying rather than self-esteeming, self-sacrificing when necessary.

And that kind of love is essential in happy and fulfilling marriage. The genuineness of love between a man and a woman is not to be judged simply by its apparent voltage: much more significant, in the long run, are the directions in which the current flows.

Men and women need to have their wits about them when they find themselves in love and are looking forward to marriage. They must concern themselves with the depths of love as well as with its surface qualities.

Some marriages are in trouble not because the couples have not got what they wanted in mates, but that they have got what they wanted—having wanted the wrong things. There is some truth in Stephen Leacock's quip, "Many a man in love with a dimple makes the mistake of marrying the whole girl."

(Davidson is minister of Dominion-Chalmers United Church, Ottawa.)

Washington honors pioneer Pacific nun

WASHINGTON (CP) — A statue of a Canadian-born nun who founded hospitals and schools along the Pacific coast was unveiled this week before an applauding, standing-room-only crowd in the U.S. Capitol Rotunda.

The ceremony made Mother Joseph of the Sisters of Providence a member of a select group of figures from U.S. history honored by having a statue in the building, the home of the U.S. Congress.

Senator Ray Perrault, government leader in the Canadian Senate who represented Prime Minister Trudeau at the ceremony, said honoring Mother Joseph, "who sought to give life and hope . . . could not be more timely and could not be more relevant."

Thursday's ceremony results from an invitation issued more than 100 years ago by President Abraham Lincoln, who asked each state to send statues of two of its most distinguished citizens to be displayed in the Capitol. Mother Joseph, a 19th-century pioneer, artist, architect and religious leader, is the 92nd person so honored.

Born Esther Pariseau in April, 1823, in St. Elzear near Montreal, she entered the Sisters of Charity of Providence in Montreal at the age of 20.

About 12 years later she was asked to take four other sisters to what was then the portion of Oregon territory that became Washington state. After travelling by boat around the tip of South America, the nuns set up their first convent in an old fur storage building in Fort Vancouver, Wash.

From the 1850s through the 1880s, Mother Joseph designed more than a score of hospitals, orphanages and schools in what now are Washington, Oregon, Idaho and Montana. She also founded institutions in New Westminster and Kootenay, B.C.

The bronze statue, by Felix de Weldon who also created the famous Iwo Jima memorial sculpture in nearby Arlington, Va., portrays Mother Joseph kneeling in prayer, her face tilted upward.

Fulford church soon 100

The oldest church in the Gulf Islands—St. Paul's at Fulford Harbor on Ganges—will celebrate its 100th anniversary Saturday, May 10.

Bishop Remi de Roo will celebrate mass in the church at 2 p.m. that day to mark the end of the first century of service to island Catholics.

The service will take place in Drummond Park or, in the event of rain, will be at Fulford hall.

Mass will be followed by a reception. Many present and former parishioners are expected to take part, and the parish has extended an open invitation to all interested.

The little church of St. Paul's at the head of Fulford Harbor has been a familiar sight to navigators for most of the century of its existence.

Sunday, May 4, 1980 — 2:00 p.m.

AT THE LEGISLATIVE BUILDINGS
Our 3rd annual rally begins at 2 p.m. on the steps of the Legislative Buildings. Mrs. Betty Green, Chairman Pro-Life Society of B.C. will speak on "The Consequences of Choice."
Brief addresses by local personalities will also be featured.

We ask that each person bring with them a flower or small bouquet.

FREEDOM of CHOICE STOPS WHERE the RIGHTS of OTHERS BEGIN

Rescue those who are unjustly sentenced to death; don't try to disclaim responsibility by saying you did not know about it. For God who knows all hearts, knows yours, and He knows you knew! And He will reward everyone according to his deeds. — Proverbs 24:11, 12 Living Bible.

WALK FOR LIFE
A symbolic and inspirational 'Walk for Life' will begin from the steps of the Legislative Buildings. Its purpose is to express our concern over the tragic deaths of more than one third million unborn Canadian babies.

U.S. starts Cuban airlift

KEY WEST, Fla. (AP) — An airlift taking Cuban refugees on their first step toward resettlement in the U.S. began today as a chartered jet headed for a temporary tent city in the Florida Panhandle.

The first flight, carrying about 130 passengers, left Key West International Airport at 10:36 a.m., more than an hour behind schedule. Each of the 128 seats on the Air Florida Boeing 727 charter was filled, and a few adults held young children on their laps.

Three other flights were planned today, with the same aircraft being used for each. The 820-kilometre flight to Eglin Air Force Base, near Fort Walton Beach, takes about two hours.

For many refugees, all arrivals on the Cuba-to-Florida Freedom Flotilla, the flight was their first time in an airplane.

"I got sick in the boat," said Raul Perez Castauesle as he boarded the plane. "I have never gone by plane before, but it clearly is better than in the boat."

The White House had said it was setting up a processing centre for as many as 10,000 refugees on a Fort Walton Beach fairgrounds property owned by the Air Force.

Meanwhile, U.S. Coast Guard officials breathed a sigh of relief that Friday's squall was not a repeat of last Sunday's killer storm, which took at least four lives. At least nine small boats sank and several others capsized while carrying the immigrants.

Iran blames U.S. for U.K. crisis

Times News Services

Foreign Minister Sadegh Ghotbzadeh suggested today the United States is linked to the Iranian embassy takeover in London and accused Iraqi diplomats of supplying weapons for the hostage seizure.

He also told reporters the government still rejects any mediation in the hostage-taking which began Wednesday. Iran would not step into the negotiations unless Britain failed to settle the issue.

Asked about the U.S. role in the embassy affair, he said the U.S. can be tied to the takeover because the "Iraqi regime is an extension of American-Israeli rule."

Ghotbzadeh said the Iranian government "has information that the weapons which were used were provided through the Iraqi diplomatic corps." He did not elaborate.

The foreign minister has already declared the three gunmen who seized the Iranian embassy are "Iraqi mercenaries."

He repeated his rejection of a proposal by the gunmen for mediation through the ambassadors of Iraq, Algeria and Jordan. The ambassador of Algeria is acceptable and he had no objection to the Jordanian envoy but the Iraqi ambassador was unacceptable.

"We let the British authorities know we don't want any mediation. Talking to the terrorists or not talking is up to the British themselves."

The Iranian government would only step in if the British failed — "so far the British have done well."

He warned that if the British government did not end the siege, "we will take the matters into our own hands."

Ghotbzadeh said there were hundreds of Iranians in London ready to "march in" and retake the embassy.

The gunmen, meanwhile, have issued a new list of demands, but British authorities would not say what they were.

The Iranian government has said it is ready to let the hostages in London die rather than accept terms laid down by the gunmen. Ghotbzadeh said the hostages' families also accept the possibility of "martyrdom" for the captives.

British officials said the gunmen holding the hostages appear "calm, cool and flexible" in negotiations.

"So far, I think, things have gone reasonably well — we've kept the dialogue going," said John Dellow, deputy assistant commissioner of Scotland Yard and chief of the embassy negotiations.

Meanwhile, the bodies of the Americans killed in the failed attempt to rescue the hostages in Tehran are ready to be sent back to the U.S.

Miracle night for pianists

By AUDREY JOHNSON

Friday's special event in the Greater Victoria Music Festival provided a night of small and large miracles of one kind and another.

The program was a windup for the piano classes which form the largest section of the festival.

Fourteen pianists, ranging from tiny tots, Kinza Tyrell and Rebekah Curran, to young adults in the open championship class, held the rapt attention of a large audience.

For the winners in each section — junior, intermediate, senior and open — there is also the satisfaction of knowing that their competition was on the highest level. It is unlikely that any one of them had done much more than nudge the rival performers.

Winning the open class with a powerful performance of Chopin's Grand Polonaise Op. 28, was Kevin Fitz-Gerald. He carried off the City of Victoria Medallion and several bursaries. Runner-up was Jonas Kvarnstrom.

Eve Egoyan, playing the first and second movements of a Mozart sonata, won the senior championship. Karen Kling was runner-up. The intermediate contest was won by Michelle Himick, who played Fantasie in D Major by Mozart and a Bartok Rhapsody. Cary Chow was runner-up.

Tiny Kinza Tyrell won the junior section with a Mozart Minuet in F Major. Runners-up were Rebekah Curran, Janice Boothman and Kristin Scott.

Miranda Wong and Michelle Himick will be the senior and junior representatives for Victoria in the Provincial Music Festival which takes place at Terrace in June. Alternates will be Monica Pfau and Cary Chow.

The third movement of Rachmaninoff's Concerto No. 2 was played by Miranda Wong as an honor performance. The pianist received a well merited ovation and was the recipient of several bursaries, including the new Baldwin Piano senior bursary. She was also named representative to the Baldwin Festival senior competition in Edmonton. Michelle Himick received the junior Baldwin Award.

All pianists in the four championship groups received bursaries. Robert Tweten, Monica Pfau and Claude McLean were contenders in the open class.

Here are more results provided by the festival office:

Avalanches, slides imminent at volcano

VANCOUVER, Wash. (UPI) — The top of simmering Mount St. Helens continues to swell and massive avalanches and landslides are an imminent danger, scientists say.

Underground volcanic pushing and shoving moved a survey marker on Mount St. Helens' bulging northern flank about 60 centimetres in less than 12 hours, the U.S Geological Survey reported Friday.

The volcano's 9,677-foot cone, which began erupting steam and ash March 27 after 123 years of dormancy, was slowly expanding. Scientists were unsure whether the movement was more pronounced up or sideways.

"The first re-measuremet of a survey marker near the highest point of the volcano's north flank showed that it had moved more than 60 centimeters in less than 12 hours since its position was first measured," the USGS report said.

"Points like Goat Rocks and Sugar Bowl at mid-level on that flank continue to show significant displacement way from the centre of the volcano."

The deformation, or swelling, is "one of the larger ones" ever recorded on a volcano, said Dr. Robert Christiansen of the USGS, noting that the smoking mountain has bulged some 100 metres in an area stretching for one mile from the volcano's crater in a northwesterly direction.

The bulged area, about 800 metres, is beneath several large glaciers, which were cracking and opening wide chasms as the earth beneath them shifted.

"Further calculations will show whether the upper part of the bulge continues to move upward or, like points lower on the mountain, is now moving laterally," the USGS said.

While geologists don't agree on the meaning of the mountain's bulging and swelling, they all agree there is a greater possibility of massive avalanches and landslides.

Vancouver playwright George Ryga is one of five Canadian playwrights who will tour Australia this month to promote English-Canadian playwriting. The tour is being made under the auspices of the Department of External Affairs and the Guild of Canadian Playwrights.

Two of the writers are women. Carol Bolt has worked with Toronto's Theatre Passe Muraille and is best known for her play, One Night Stand, the CBC film version of which won four Canadian Film Awards. Erika Ritter is the author of Automatic Pilot, a successful comedy which Bastion Theatre has included in its 1980-81 season.

The other two are Chris Brookes whose What's That Got To Do With the Price of Fish? and They Club Seals, Don't They? were performed during Codco visits to The Belfry; and Sheldon Rosen who has had a play, Ned and Jack, running for two seasons at Stratford and is currently under contract for future Broadway production.

The five playwrights will illustrate the diversity of work being done in English speaking Canada through selected readings and general discussion. They will visit Adelaide, Canberra, Melbourne, Sydney, Newcastle, Wellington and possibly Auckland.

Canada Council has approved a reshaped recording program for classical music. It replaces a previous one suspended for economic reasons at the end of the 1978--79 fiscal year and is aimed at furthering the careers of Canadian performers and facilitating the making of records by independent Canadian producers.

Eligible to apply under the new $100,000 program are (a) Canadian performers (soloists or resident chamber groups only) who are making their first or second record; and (b) Canadian producers who wish to put on disc Canadian music not previously recorded.

Folk heritage music is eligible for support under the program, but rock, jazz and other forms of popular music are not.

Application deadline is Sept. 1.

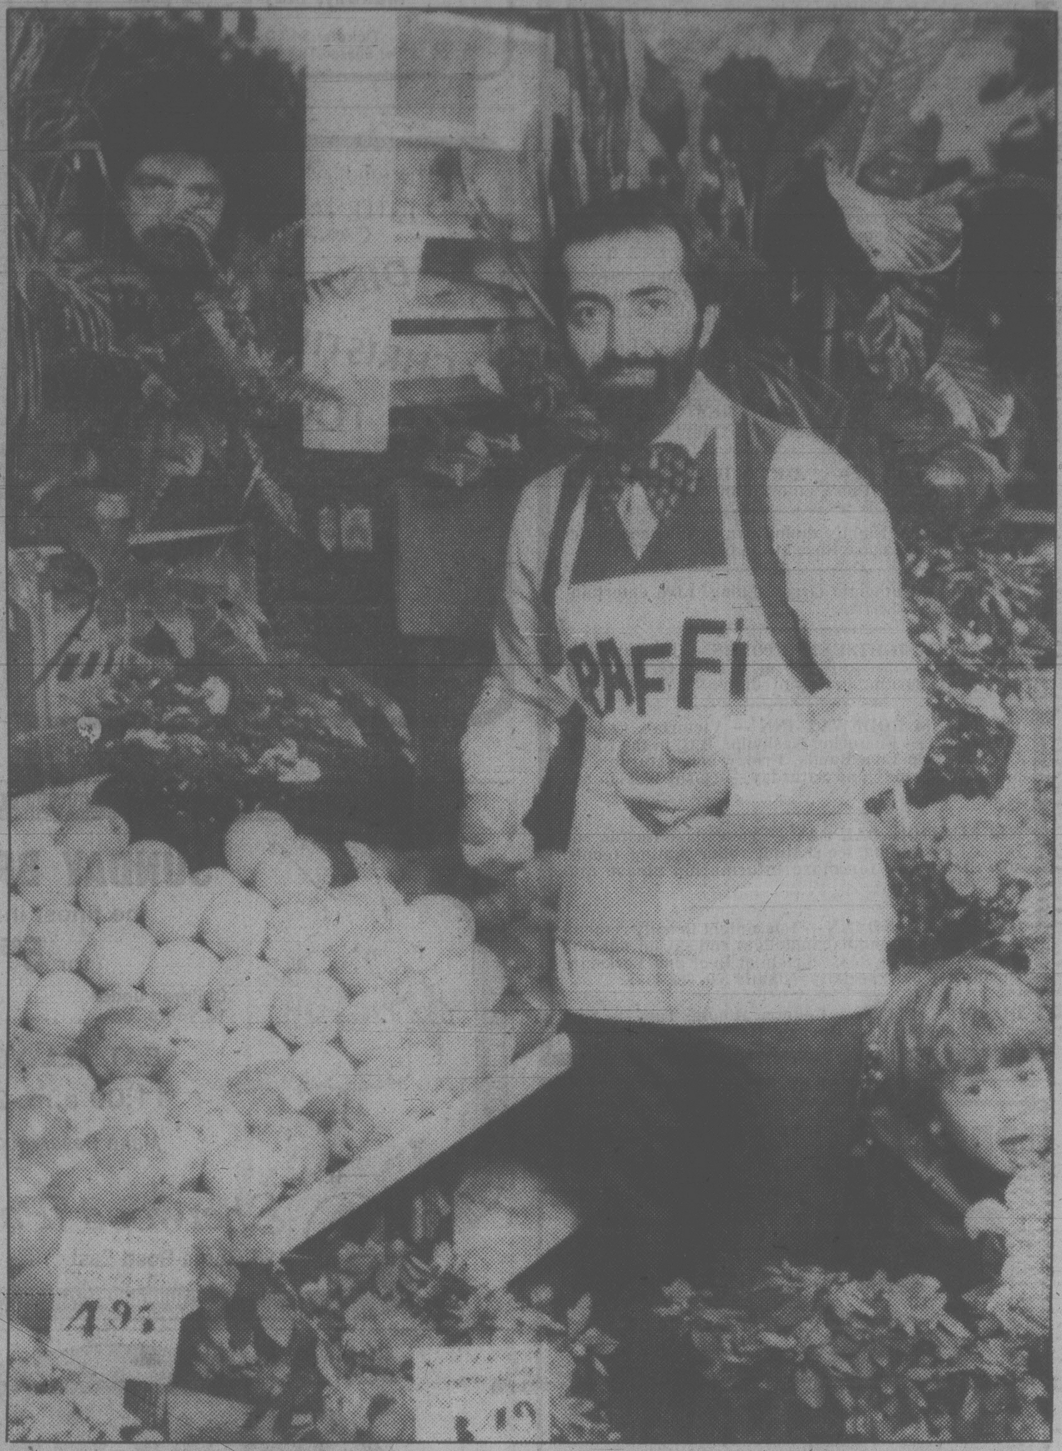
Raffi lights a fuse



RAFFI'S IN TOWN today and tomorrow and he's brought news of a his fourth album — as yet unnamed and preceded by Singable Songs for the Very Young, More Singable Songs and The Corner Grocery Store. His B.C. Festival for Young People presentation takes place again Sunday at 1 and 3 p.m. All tickets to the McPherson Foundation presentation are $2.

By LON WOOD

Raffi wowed 'em by the hundreds with song today as he lit the fuse on the second annual B.C. festival for Young People.

Sunday at the McPherson he delivers two more concerts at 1 and 3 p.m. Next, Sharon, Lois and Bram get tiny toes tapping when they pick up the reins May 12 — while May 14, 15 and 16 see daily performances by Carousel Theatre in Step On A Crack, Green Thumb Players' Portrait of the Adult as a Young Kid and Sukay's Magic Flutes of the Andes.

In a leisurely interview Friday, the 31-year-old stage and recording artist offered a "scoop" to his Victoria following.

Three months ago he and Debi Pike, his wife, wrote Baby Beluga—a not unreasonably anthropomorphic tale of a young white whale they met in Vancouver.

"It is a song — perhaps the title song — of the fourth album," said Raffi. "The theme of the fourth album is a bit of a departure from the other three, which are all sort of singable songs albums.

"This time, I wanted to take a position of concern in terms of environmental themes and so on. Nature appreciation — basically an appreciation of life. And above all, I didn't want the stuff to sound electric."

A run through of a studio tape of Baby Beluga confirms that the old Raffi integrity holds — simple quality, flavored in this case with a breath of the Swing Era. And should young people eventually learn and become concerned that gentle and intelligent whales are disappearing daily and popping up in tubs of margarine on the world's tables — what's the harm?

"There will be no need for anyone to think 'Raffi has gone serious on us. Where are the fun tunes?'" he says. "Those tunes are still there — interesting, very musical, and non-lecturing."

If adult or child is deaf to messages, three other songs captured in the Troubador studio indicate sheer joy of melody will carry the album when it is released this fall.

All I Really Need lilts with reggae and a kind of non-gospel, small "s" spritual that will please any youngster — none of which could fail to identify with "All I really need is a . . . song in my heart . . . food in my bel-ly . . . love in my . . . fa-mi-ly . . ." There are no visions of Fisher-Price menageries or trips to Disneyland.

"I wrote that song in response to requests for a definitive theme on the on Year of the Child," says Raffi. "Earlier this week I sang it on the Vancouver Show — didn't think I did that great a job but after the show, two ladies came up and said they were really moved with the idea of love in the family.

"If it evokes that kind of response, it's great!"

Friend Bruce Cockburn turns up with his guitar, as does Grit Laskin with his dulcimer and pennywhistle, on Thanks a Lot, a Raffi vocal, and Water Dance, an instrumental penned by Raffi.

As in the first three albums, which "went platinum" for exceptional sales (There's a Raffi record bought every five minutes in Canada), the new disc will again leave others exclaiming "Why didn't I think of that?" and will leave Raffi mildly embarassed at times because what he's done is very simple.

"Where's the complexity?" he says. "And what is the need for it?

"There is a certain depth to some of this simplicity that people don't quite see on the surface. For instance, struggle and complaint and grievance in life makes interesting copy — while joy usually doesn't interest anyone though it is what we are all after."

Raffi preserves his simple bearing by leading a simple life — of care for his physical and mental health. He is not spiritual by doctrine — a born-again Druid or into est — but does practice yoga.

"I work at keeping my sanity every day — by contemplation; strongly feeling the sense of creation of which I'm part. The creator does his or her job and as long as I do mine to the best of my ability, then anything above that I don't really have to worry about because it's not my gig.

"Fate to me . . . is simply recognizing I have my small place in the overall thing."

Raffi is the middle child of an Ottawa family — his dad being Cavouk, the internationally-established photographer of popes, royalty and politicians. He worked for his father briefly before going into music nearly a dozen years ago as a naive young folksinger out there with his D chord and his G chord trying to change the world.

Initially he struck out as an adult entertainer, but by chance and the encouragement of Debi's mom, Daphne, he turned to children.

"What am I giving up? Not very much. And in return what have I gained? I tell you, it's changed my life — it really has.

"If you'd asked a little further back then, you'd have found all I really wanted to do was make people feel good — to share feelings, heart to heart, to touch them emotionally. I'm doing all that now."

For several years Raffi put on both kinds of concerts — "children in the afternoon and adults at night."

"It just got to be too much. In January last year I decided to concentrate solely on children and drop the other. Am I fulfilled artistically? That was the big question — and the answer is yes."

Besides, the whole pop market is difficult to break into.

"You need a lot of luck, connections, and a big label," he says. "And there are cruel managers who keep their artists so high that when they walk out onto the stage they 'sell' immediately. I'm very serious about keeping my sanity in that department as well. Sure we're really selling records and doing shows, but I'm still only one small person in one small hole.

Raffi is not big on hype, and says nowhere in nature will you find a sign pointing to a waterfall and stating "This Is Out Of Sight!" Nor are there hills that are "Hill Number One" or "Best Selling Brook Of The Year" — it's just all out there waiting for individual preference to be exercised.

"So in my field, you either do more and more of the same — more concerts, more glitter — or you keep in touch with yourself and do something that's fundamentally part of your nature. If you can do the latter, then your sanity's taken care of."

(If Raffi has escaped stereotypes, so has his manager Glenn Sernyk — a soft-spoken but firm personality who seems to handle concert-booking with great aplomb, sans glitter.)

An artist like Nana Mouskouri, he says, is an example of a person who has kept a sense of herself.

"What do they criticize her for? Her glasses. That level of reality is seen as boring or whatever by some people. To me? It delights me. 'She wears glasses! Isn't that great!' What I see is what I get — and that's all I could hope for myself.

"Working with children, you know with them what you're seeing is what you get."

Raffi, who is often asked to speak at educational conferences and who with Debi is developing an interest in child development, says all his adult market is not lost.

"I feel I reach adults in a very underground sort of way. They don't even feel the ointment."

Any fear an entertainer might have of being stereotyped as a children's singer is based on the myth that to be so is a lesser thing, he said.

"I had to find out — to be sure that it was just as important as singing to adults. Now I feel it is more important — and I haven't lost adults. They come to my performances. They hear the music their kids listen to at home and I get them involved."

With his latest songs, he says, he feels he will reach more adults on a deeper and important level than perhaps previously.

"Children are the focus, a starting point for adulthood," he said. "And if people don't — for example — care about what they do to their own bodies with smoking or drinking or whatever — or with their environment in terms of air and water quality and so on — then maybe, just maybe, they might think twice about those things when they relate it to their own children.

"Maybe they need to be reminded to think that way — because a lot of people dearly love their children . . . so I hear and as it should be.'

Circus operator Paul Kaye was awarded custody of Dumbo, the Elephant, while his former wife, Judy, who played Tinkerbelle at Disneyland, says she will fight to get Dumbo back. She is suing Kaye for a share of what he earned when they lived together before their marriage. Part of that disputed property is Dumbo, an Asian elephant about 30 years old.

New York choreographer Alvin Ailey, 49, has been charged with burglary and assault after a woman was forced into her apartment and assaulted.

Actress Ann-Margaret says "I've never thought it was unflattering when people called me a sex symbol. I guess it means sensual and that isn't altogether a bad thing as long as there is more to a woman."

Los Angeles' district attorney is investigating allegations that Robert Wagner and Natalie Wood were cheated out of part of their 50-per-cent share of profits from the television series Charlie's Angels. The husband and wife were given half ownership of the series by its producers as an inducement to star together in a television movie called The Affair. Recent reports said that between 1977 and 1979 almost $500,000 intended for the couple was diverted to Starsky and Hutch, a now-defunct series in which the Wagners had no financial interest.

Singer Graham Nash, on a cross-Canada tour, is singing about saving the environment. "I'm no hero. I'm the same as anyone out there who cares about their lives and worries about what they're doing to the environment. I get bloody angry when I think about all the nuclear waste." Nash has become an organizer of last fall's anti-nuke concert in New York by the Musicians United For Nuclear Safety. A film of the concert is to be released this summer.

Two Toronto film-makers chained themselves to the fence at the office of the Ontario Board of Censors to protest against the board's attempt to cut scenes from The Tin Drum. Reid Shane and Robert Meckler, both 20, said they have no personal interest in the controversial film, but were protesting the board's power to keep Ontaro residents from seeing uncut versions of acclaimed films. They want the board abolished. Policemen on the scene appeared reluctant to arrest the two and as one cruiser drove off, one officer said: "Hell, I want to see the movie too."

High notes

A brass fanfare played by a highly rated Mount Douglas Secondary School ensemble will herald the Festival Highlights program at McPherson Playhouse, Monday.

There will follow a compact 100 minutes of performances carefully chosen to represent the enormous amount of fine talent and training witnessed throughout two-and-a-half weeks of playing, singing, dancing and speaking.

Confirmed for the concert are the Monterey School Senior Choir, tiny tap soloist Nicole Martin, Glenlyon's young speech choir and the Ballet, Pleasure Cruise.

Also the superb adult Cowichan Chorale; pianist Miranda Wong who gained the Festival's overall highest mark of 97; the remarkable eight year old violin duettists, Sara Tyrrell and Shelley Matkin; French horn player Karen Hough; the Philippine Dancers; Rose Bowl winner Elizabeth Zunti and St.Michael's University School recorder ensemble.

The McPherson Playhouse Foundation $500 bursary and specially commissioned trophy will be awarded for the festival's "Most Distinguished Performance."

MIRANDA WONG of Victoria was awarded highest mark overall in the Greater Victoria Music Festival this week with a total 97 points. The 19-year-old pianist also tied with Kevin Fitz-Gerald in the open concerto class. Festival competition ended Friday night with the Festival Highlights Concert representative program set for Monday at the McPherson Playhouse, 8 p.m.

Travel pieces on exhibit

the galleries

A new exhibition simply entitled Landscapes, presents oil, pastel and watercolor drawings by Victoria artist Don Harvey. It opens Sunday at noon at Kyle's Gallery, 1545 Fort.

Harvey, at present a professor in the School of Fine Arts at University of Victoria, has had one-man and group exhibitions across Canada and participated in may international group shows in major galleries in Europe and the United States. His work is represented extensively in public collections, including the National Gallery of Canada, the Montreal Museum of Fine Arts, Seattle Art Museum, the CBC, Canada Council Art Bank, Toronto Dominion Bank and others.

Returning from a sabbatical year of drawing and painting spent in France in 1978-79, during a late winter trip from Calgary to Victoria, Harvey made a number of oil, pastel and watercolor paintings of the landscape through which he passed.

This exhibition is comprised of work done on these travels.

Harvey appreciates the long lineage of British watercolor painters of landscape and posseses the English love of the countryside with its hedgerow flora, open fields and rambling gardens. He is also attracted to the terraced vineyards of the Italian countryside with their neat patterns of fences across the low hills.

Thus when he turns to landscape painting, Harvey does not paint the enormous wilderness scenery of the Rockies, but land modified by agriculture and intruded upon by civilization.

Landscape painting is a fairly recent development in the work of Donald Harvey, who most recently exhibited the 'Diamond' drawings at the Art Gallery of Greater Victoria.

As a young man he painted landscapes but not again until his 1971 sojourn in Ireland, and the present works which form the exhibition at Kyle's.

The gallery is open for viewing daily, Tuesday through Sunday from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. and Wednesday through Friday, 7:30 until 10 p.m. The show continues through May.

at the Art Gallery of Greater Victoria, this is the last two days of the exhibition, American Painting 1955-1976. This major show of contemporary and major American artists' work has attracted considerable attention. The large, colorful and impressive canvases may not come this way again for a long time, so the weekend viewing hours — 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Saturday and 1 to 5 p.m. Sunday, provide the last chance to see the important show.

Works of Carl Schaefer, the premier living Canadian watercolorist, are now on view at the gallery, and starting Thursday, will be the History of Ceramics show and one of prints from Recent Accessions, as well as the work of three Swiss artists who are installing works specifically designed for the gallery.

There is another opening, Sunday from 2 to 6 p.m. This takes place at the Backroom Gallery, 2070 Oak Bay, and consists of etchings by Noboru Sawai.

The artist is assistant professor of prints and drawings at the University of Calgary and has work in many permanent collections including the Glenbow Museum at Calgary, the National Gallery, Canada Council Art Bank and Department of External Affairs.

The showing continues through May 17.

Porcelain by Harlan House is going on view Sunday at The Quest, 1023 Government, 2 p.m. to 6 p.m., continuing there through May 17 with the usual 9 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. hours, and to 9 p.m. Thursdays and Fridays.

And at the University of Victoria's Maltwood Gallery, Patterns and Inclinations, a showing of Lobb/Clement photographs is on view throughout the month, starting Wednesday.

Land mine kills seven

LUSAKA (Reuter) — Seven people were killed and eight injured when the vehicle in which they were riding struck a land mine on a road near Chongwe, about 110 kilometres east of Lusaka, the official Times of Zambia newspaper reports.

The paper, operated by the ruling United National Independence Party, blamed the April 15 incident on a mine planted by pre-independence Rhodesian troops last year.

Modern ballet to visit

For classical ballet lovers in this city, the visit of Les Grands Ballets Canadiens will provide a rare treat after several encounters this season with companies doing modern work.

One of the three top companies in Canada, Les Grands Ballets will give two performances at the Royal Theatre, May 11 and 12, dancing a program of three complete ballets — the classical Les Sylphides and Firebird, and their own original and delightful Tam Ti Delam.

Sylphide, of course, is one of the great 'white' ballets and Firebird is the Stravinsky masterpiece as choreographed by Maurice Bejart.

Tam Ti Delam is a charming work that reflects the spirit of Montreal. It brings together in an unusual and effective marriage, classical and folk elements. Tam ti delam is the rhythmic jargon of the caller in a square dance situation when he has run out of squares to call.

In this ballet the company is on pointe while the caller is in tap shoes.

Music for Tam Ti Delam is by Quebec's poet laureate, Gilles Vigneault, a popular artist who might be described as the Jacques Brel of French Canada.

By the end of the current season Les Grands Ballets will have given 125 performances in the United States, Europe (France, Italy, Switzerland and Yugoslavia) and in Canada from coast to coast.

Six-pack bugs Jim

One thing really rankles Jimmy Stewart — that's having to buy half-a-dozen wood screws when all you need is one. He was in Harrisburg, Pa., Thursday, to accept his home state's Distinguished Artist Award, and to remember his grandfather's hardware store. Said he, "I'm appalled at the inroads ... on real hardware stores. I'm appalled that you go into one of these stores and say, 'I want an inch-and-a-half, or a three-eighths-of-an-inch screw,' and they give you a cellophane-covered thing with six screws. You want one. They give you six."

Play preview next week

Curious about the Emily Carr musical that will occupy Newcombe Auditorium for five weeks this summer?

A sneak preview of the show by Norman and Elaine Campbell (of Anne of Green Gables fame) will give Victorians a small taste, Saturday, May 10, when three songs from The Wonder of it All are performed in connection with the National Book Festival celebrations.

The performance will take place in Market Square starting at 1 p.m. and the tuneful songs will be sung by lead performers Margaret Martin (Emily Big) and Jill Galt (Emily Middle).

Margaret Martin . . . as Emily Carr

In keeping with Book Festival objectives Martin will also read selections from the writings of Victoria's celebrated artist-author. Actor-director Peter Mannering joins the "Emilies" impersonating an assortment of tenants in the famous House of All Sorts.

A performance of Four Seasons Musical Theatre's Pied Piper follows at 2 p.m.Cast and crew have undertaken responsibility of returning all children attending the event in the square, to their parents.

The Wonder of it All will open at Newcombe June 27 snd play through July 31.

Nightmare in black and white

By WALTER KELLYTHORNE

FREDDY'S BOOK, by John Gardner. Random House. $12.95.

Winesap is a psycho-historian: his latest lecture, delivered to an appreciative audience in Madison, Wisconsin, is called "The Psychopolitics of the Late Welsh Fairytale: Fee, Fie, Foe, Revolution!"

He has, he tells us, "always tried to be, so far as I know how, a just man, not needlessly unkind," so when other guests at the after-lecture party behave rudely to Professor Agaard, Winesap feels that the man deserves better treatment.

At the least he deserves a fair hearing: for Agaard has informed all and sundry that he has "a son who is a monster."

So Winesap goes out to Agaard's house in the country where he lives with his son.

Agaard, it turns out, is "a difficult man . . . now snivelling, now smiling, now cackling with glee . . . watching me, his chosen antagonist, with unsmiling vigilance in his dim, crafty little eyes."

Agaard leads Winesap through hallways to the room where Freddy lives in solitude: the locks on all the doors are to keep others out.

Though huge, Freddy is really a decent sort of boy. Obviously intelligent, he decorates his room with handcrafted dragons and pictures of Vikings. And he has written a book.

Confined by the snowstorm raging outside, the cold and the darkness, Winesap settles in late at night to read Freddy's book.

"In the sixteenth century, when Lappland was almost entirely unknown, and Finland was civilization's last outpost, there lived, in the then-significant country of Sweden, a knight who was afraid of nothing in the world except the Devil. The knight's name was Lars-Goren."

Lars-Goren has a reputation as a man of deep mind and slow speech, just the sort of man to offer good counsel to his friend Gustav, soon to be the Swedish king in opposition to the Danes and Germans and pirates who seek to keep the country dismembered in order to line their own pockets.

But Lars-Goren's skills are powerless against the one who is really controlling the action: the Devil.

At this time the Devil was present in Sweden "at least every other day"; as Lars-Goren remarks, "Who knows where the Devil ends and the rest begins?"

As a bird, as a talking fish or donkey, as any one of several different people, the Devil counsels men and women everywhere to plunder and kill, cheat and make deals with their enemies and friends.

Freddy's Book is a nightmare collage lit only by the fire of burning bodies and the heat of human lies.

If a comparison might be made, we need to look at Ingmar Bergman's films: black and white, stark, the figures on the black ground etched against a high gray sky; or, as when Gustav and Lars-Goren meet the aged, dandified Bishop Brask and his horsemen in a wood, the sudden flare of violence and laughter.

Our imaginations have help, though: Freddy's text, and Gardner's, too, is accompanied by 12 astonishing drawings by Daniel Biamonte.

Strongly etched, shadowed, bulky, massive, Biamonte's drawings conjure perfectly the wretched times that frame these characters' ignorance and blunders.

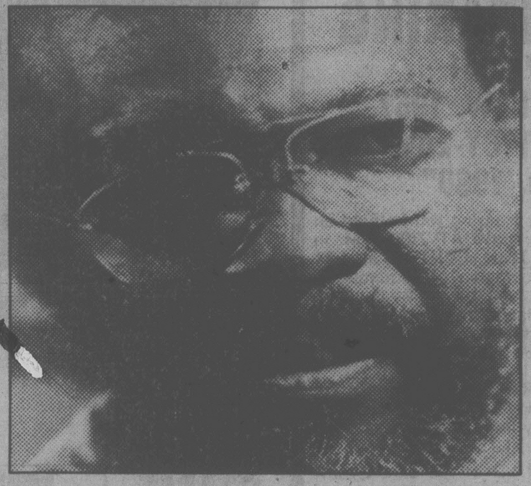
A 'colonial' remembers

By DOUG BEARDSLEY

GROWING UP STUPID UNDER THE UNION JACK: A Memoir, By Austin Clarke. McClelland and Stewart. $13.95.

TEA WITH THE QUEEN: An Autobiography, by Nellie McClung. Intermedia Press. $5.95.



Austin Clarke . . . broken-bottle razor

Autobiography is a strange and difficult art form, impossible to define. Of course we all know it is an account or record of a person's life written by himself, but what does that tell us?

Surely the excitement of an autobiography comes from how closely the writing borders on the literal, but how can we be certain of what we're getting? Autobiography is an act of memory, "a sort of life" as Graham Greene called it; confessional, highly selective, dependent on pragmatic immediacy in its attempt to trace the teleology of a life.

Austin Clarke was born in Barbados in 1934, and Growing Up Stupid Under The Union Jack traces his early years in that country before he moved to Toronto in 1955.

Clarke's first volume of his autobiography begins in the author's secondary school years, his book-bag filled with "puzzles of new knowledge . . , his head clean-shaved by a broken glass bottle" used as a razor. Success in this school meant a civil servant post; failures became sanitary inspectors, our contemporary euphemism for garbagemen.

The author's young life had several guises. We see him as schoolboy, choir boy, and Cadet Corps volunteer, all in a village where English history and culture and English civilization were the daily fare. We see him taking the Cambridge Examination, anaswering questions "which had nothing to do with the way we lived, with the way we understood ourselves, with the way we saw ourselves." Clarke's life was truly the life of a "colonial, overseas, and overseered English," a fate we are only too familiar with in this country.

The author's description of the lifestyle of his fellow "black Britons in little England" has none of the bittersweet insight so characteristic of his best work. The early classroom encounters are more vividly depicted in his second novel, Among Thistles & Thorns (1965), and a more fully-felt portrait of his mother is available in the short story "An Easter Carol."

Austin Clarke, one of the few writers to explore black-white relations in Canada, is best known for his recent novel The Prime Minister, and a collection of short stories entitled When He Was Young And Free And He Used To Wear Silks. Growing Up Stupid Under The Union Jack adds little to his stature, though it is interesting to note that it has just won the Casa de las Americas Literary Prize for 1980.

Tea With The Queen has Her Majesty's coat of arms on its cover, the same coat of arms that adorned Austin Clarke's Cambridge Examination. And there the similarity ends.

The first instalment of Nellie McClung's autobiography purports to reveal "the same wealth and humor which characterized the career of her famous grandmother," but the younger McClung makes it clear that the above traits are not hereditary.

This slim, 58-page book, by the grand-daughter of the famous suffragette, contains eight autobiographical stories that focus on what it was like to grow up and go to school in the Edmonton of the '50s and after, but we experience nothing from the inside.

The stories are all told in a demure, slightly stiff, cute and superficial manner, and there is a self-important, self-congratulatory tone about them that is simply unwarranted. Moreover, there is something terribly provincial about what McClung sees and the way she sees it. She writes like a gossip columnist, flitting from one unrelated topic to another, while offering the reader only the surface of things.

A harsh light on RCMP

By PAUL BENNETT

MEN IN THE SHADOWS: The RCMP Security Service, by John Sawatsky. Doubleday. $15.

A lot of people aren't going to like what they read in this book.

For them the Royal Canadian Mounted Police can still do no wrong, despite all the news stories and inquiry commission reports to the contrary.

Other people who have been perplexed by some of the news reports detailing seemingly inexplicable acts by some members of the RCMP will find explanations and a few searching questions in Sawatsky's book.

And finally, Sawatsky makes a convincing argument that the Security Service should be divorced from the RCMP and operate as an independent agency.

Sawatsky, a Simon Fraser University graduate, was posted to Ottawa for the Vancouver Sun in 1975. His 1975 investigations of the Agencee de Presse Libre du Quebec "bag job" in October of 1972 helped precipitate public inquiries of Canada'a national police force that are continuing today.

Much of the book delves into RCMP internal witch-hunt history. It reviews some of the early successes of the RCMP Security Service, and some early questionable activities as well.

The first chapter opens with the break-in and fire at the Cuban Trade Commission office in Montreal early on April 4, 1972. Sawatsky lays the blame for this squarely on the RCMP security force, and said it was done to demonstrate to the CIA Canada's willingness to cooperate in intelligence-gathering.

Sawatsky says the development of the RCMP Security Service along American lines "eventually brought disrepute to the entire organization because of acts that were ineffective and illegal."

Toward the end of the 1960s, the attitude of many regular members of the RCMP to the sinister arm of the Security Service began turning against it, partly because the branch wanted to separate and because it demanded special treatment.

"The Security Service satisfied the RCMP's desire to be the one organization protecting Canada from all threats, whether criminal, subversive or espionage," Sawatsky said, but as the 1970s brought increasing embarrassment on the force as a whole, that changed.

Many Criminal Investigation Branch (now called the Criminal Investigation Directorate) Mounties were more interested in policing than security work and saw the Security Service as a parasite, siphoning off the best talent.

Sawatsky says that during the research for his book he became convinced that members of the RCMP have their own interpretation of illegal activities.

"They believe their acts are morally right and view impeding legal statutes only as technical barriers, not ethical ones. A Mountie has a more committed sense of duty than most Canadians and holds longstanding grievances that the country's law-makers do not know what the RCMP is doing, and pass laws restricting the force and assisting the enemy.

"They believe that lawmakers, although they want to preserve order, are so informed and consumed by politics that the results of their legislation do not meet their objectives." This explains the rationale that a Mountie cannot hold up a grocery store, but can steal dynamite to further the fight against subversion.

Dynamite-stealing, coercion and barn-burning were among the excesses committed by the now-disbanded G Section, set up in Quebec to make up for the force's failure to predict and understand the FLQ kidnapping in 1970.

Sawatsky claims that without the bungling amateurism of members of G Section in Quebec, the entrenched operations of E Special, the most secret branch of the Secret Service entrusted with illegal operations, would probably still remain unpublicized.

"At no time did the Security Service make a formal decision to condone illegal activity. It was embraced through a series of gradations over a number of years. Illegal acts had always been committed, but an endorsement of systematic illegality by the Security Service began in the early 1950s with organized disruption campaigns against the Communist Party of Canada."

"Given the circumstances — the perceived threat, the dedication, the conviction of rightness, the RCMP's propensity to obey orders, the closed environment, the lack of sophistication, the excitement, the desire for advancement in the force — it is not surprising that a group of honest and decent individuals en masse accepted illegal activity so casually."

Sawatsky says the trauma of the Keable and McDonald Commissions into RCMP operations had led to shakeups in senior ranks that have impaired the Security Service's ability to do its job.

" . . . Canada needs protection from espionage and subversions and . . . these duties should be performed by individuals selected and trained for that task," he says, pointing out that the Security Service is also vulnerable to penetration by "deep cover" agents who join the regular RCMP.

Despite its failings, the Security Force has improved remarkably in the past 35 years and will continue to do so, Sawatsky says.

"However, the Security Service's effectiveness is restrained and will continue to be held back as long as it is stifled by a structure designed to accomplish another task," he concluded.

Undersea guide for divers, curious

By HUMPHRY DAVY

MARINE LIFE: An Illustrated Encyclopedia of Invertebrates in the Sea, by David and Jennifer George. Douglas & McIntyre. $40.

"Often standing on the shore at low tide, has one longed to walk on and in under the waves and see it all for a moment." So wrote Charles Kingsley, the eminent Victorian writer and naturalist. Little did he realize in 1855 that in less than 100 years his dream would come true.

He was writing in an age when modern marine biology was first established and when public interest in the wonders of the sea peaked to an all-time high. Early in the century, Nathaniel Ward, a Whitechapel surgeon, invented the aquarium. Dredging for specimens of sea-life was common practice. And by mid-century, several popular handbooks on the subject, some with superb plates, were published in Britain.

But public enthusiasm for marine life waned at the turn of the century mainly because the subject was commercially over-exploited. Many aquariums closed and popular literature on sea-life declined. Then in the 1950's there was an upsurge of interest due to the development of underwater breathing apparatus (SCUBA), and improvements in techniques and equipment for taking photographs in the sea.

This new book is a product of these advances, and it's a most excellent one. It contains 1,339 first-class color photographs of marine animals in their natural environment. The prints were supplied by the Seaphoto Photographic Library in Bristol, England, which has one of the largest collections of marine photos in the world.

But Marine Life is more than a coffee-table book, though it certainly can be enjoyed as such by people who don't participate in underwater activities. It's a field guide, an encyclopedia of invertebrates in the sea. A book of this kind was long overdue, as the sea contains mainly animals without backbones or spinal columns — sea anemones, corals, sponges, jelly fishes, starfishes, clams, crabs.

The authors, a husband-and-wife team, have named and classified the sea animals under a system familiar to professional biologists. Some amateurs may think it somewhat too technical, but it need not be so if the explanatory text is read carefully. And re-read if necessary, until it sinks in. Nothing comes easy. With a little perserverance the classification system of invertebrates can be mastered.

Good and evil down the mole hole

By ANTHONY JENKINS

DUNCTON WOOD, by William Horwood. McGraw-Hill Ryerson. $17.50.

Duncton Wood inevitably invites comparison with Watership Down and The Lord of the Rings. Yet by the end of this epic allegorical fantasy about the struggle between good and evil down in the mole burrows that lie below the Duncton beech trees, Horwood has created a mythic world which reflects a philosophy that is neither Adams nor Tolkien.

To learn about the mole's habitat, Horwood lived in a one-room hut for 18 months. He describes the woodland and the details of the moles' lives with an Adams-like authenticity. But the novel is not another Watership Down, for the animal world gradually becomes a mythic equivalent of our world, and the moles then appear transparently as super-humans in animal disguise.

Bracken, the novel's chief protagonist, is the weakling of his litter; he survives by his wits and by the strength of his enterprising spirit. Unable to compete in the struggles for territory within the mole-system, Bracken moves to the ancient burrows that his fellows have deserted.

There he meets Hulver, an aged tribal elder, who stirs his imagination with stories of the old ways and of the power of the great stone that stands on the hilltop at the centre of Duncton Wood.

The rest of the moles have forgotten that power; their civilization has wound down. Few remember the sacred songs that used to be sung near The Stone on Midsummer's Eve, and the sacred festival on the longest night of the year had declined into a jocular holiday spree.

Told baldly like this, the allegory sounds naively obvious, but the richness of Horwood's imagined world creates a many-layered and fascinating surface which diverts one from a one-to-one interpetation. And his plot — which does remind one of Tolkien in its epic struggles and romantic quests — is both striking and exciting.

For the weakening of the old beliefs has put the Duncton mole-system in the power of Mandrake, a gigantic black mole who has appeared among them out of the wilds of distant Siabod. Vicious and mad, he is, nevertheless, mysteriously vulnerable because of the circumstances of his terrible birth on a Welsh mountainside. Mandrake is determined to deny the saving grace of The Stone as he himself has been denied love.

Thr first half of the novel pits Mandrake against Bracken and against the genuinely evil machinations of his chief henchmole, Rune. Their triangular struggle centres on Rebecca, Mandrake's daughter. Through her love, Bracken successfully penetrates the mysteries that lie in the ancient burrows under The Stone.

Plague, fire, and Bracken's quest for the seventh stone of Siabod round out the saga. But here the bridge between the moles' world and ours is stretched to straining point.

In the wood itself, tha animals obey an intricately conceived natural pattern, but on their journeys they turn into super-heroes, despite the realistically detailed terrors of the "owl-paths," the highways with their glaring headlights. And the moles' mating habits, described with an astonishing sensuality, clash jarringly against Bracken's romantic and monogamous love for Rebecca.

The climactic scenes on the slopes of Siabod are entirely gripping, but they move the novel out of the natural world and beyond the human world onto a transcendental plane. Yet it is these chapters which mark this mythic world as Horwood's own.

Around the central mystique of a lyrical and beatific love, cluster a host of occult ideas: the efficacy of silence and meditation, the pull within the alignment of the seven sacred stones that bind these ancient settlements together, the healing strength of plants and the touch of hands, the art of King Fu. A trendy list from the mid-seventies, but one which assumes a certain amount of integrity through the patterns of the novel itself.

What fascinated me about Duncton Wood, apart from its imaginative force and its persuasive excitements, is the way it illustrates how our modern society still feeds on myth but cannot accept it without a disguise. Although the realm of faerie and the derring-do of knights-at-arms are no longer adult fare, they can become so under the guise of moles or hobbits. For the true force of Duncton Wood comes not from its modish ideas but from the enduring allure of epic romance.

Perhaps Duncton Wood will become another cult novel like the Lord of the Rings; the paperback rights, at any rate, have been sold before publication of this first edition. The book is certainly a rewarding and dramatic experience and, despite the fact that several of its themes seem rather shop-worn, I should not be surprised, within a year or two, to see posters and buttons proclaiming, "Bracken Lives!"

Nepal peaks getting crowded

By STUART AUERBACH
Washington Post

KATMANDU, Nepal — The "sold-out" sign is up on Nepal's mountains, which include eight of the world's 10 highest peaks.

Mount Everest, the world's tallest mountain — which was conquered for the first time just 27 years ago — is by far the most popular. It is booked solid, two expeditions a season, through 1987 and the Nepalese government has received enough applications to take care of the rest of the decade.

Nepal's six other peaks higher than 26,700 feet are booked through 1983.

"If you want to climb them, you have to wait until 1984," said Shailendra Raj Sharma, the Nepalese government official in charge of mountain climbing expeditions.

Mountain-climbing has become so popular that Nepal found in 1978 that it had to regulate expeditions to make sure they don't bump into each other, often with disastrous results, on the peaks.

The growing popularity of mountain-climbing as a sport means big bucks for Nepal. Last fall alone the country earned $1.2 million in much needed foreign exchange from the fees paid by 26 international expeditions.

Tourism — in which mountain climbing and its less strenuous cousin trekking, plays a big part — has now replaced the hiring of Nepal's famed Gurkha troops in the Indian and British armies as the largest source of foreign exchange.

"There's been an explosion in interest in mountain climbing," said Al Read, a former Foreign Sevice officer who traded stripped pants for hobnailed boots to promote mountain travel here.

"People are no longer content to see the museums of Europe when they can go mountain-climbing, trekking or scubba diving. More and more people are coming to the Himalayas for the kind of adventure 10 years ago they only read about in books or dreamt about."

Part of the new interest in climbing, said Read, is the result of improved equipment that makes it less dangerous for ordinary people.

Nonetheless, it is still an expensive sport. It cost, for instance, $12,000 in licence fees alone to climb Nepal's other peaks higher than 26,700 feet.

But compared to India and Pakistan, Nepal is the "cheapest," Sharma said.

According to sources here, China has decided to open some of its peaks to expeditions and has studied how Nepal regulates climbers. "The Chinese decided to double the fees," said one source.

But fees are only one aspect of income from mountain-climbing. It cost an average of $500,000 to mount a major mountain-climbing expedition, and Sharma estimated about half the money gets spent here.

"The money goes to the lowest strata of people in the country," Sharma said. Expeditons buy food and hire Sherpa guides in the villages. Moreover, under Nepalese law they must outfit the native porters with the same cold-weather gear the climbers themselves wear. The porters generally sell these sleeping bags, parkas and other equipment after every expedition, giving them additional income.

To meet the demand for mountain-climbing time, Nepal has opened some of its peaks for the winter, when the frigid cold makes the climb extremely tough. But, said Sharma, the snows are more constant and there is less risk of a killing avalanche.

Last month, a group of Poles made the first winter ascent of Mount Everest.

But styles in mountain-climbing are changing. When mountaineers first began climbing the Himalayan peaks, they staged all-out assaults going up the easier faces.

Dempster true motoring adventure

By PAUL KORING

WHITEHORSE, Yukon (CP) — For the motorist with a sense of adventure, and at least a couple of good spare tires, the Dempster Highway linking Dawson City, Yukon, to Inuvik in the Northwest Territories offers an unparalleled challenge.

The Dempster, completed last summer, runs 721 kilometres through virtually untouched wilderness. It crosses country full of wildlife and a land imbued with romantic legends of the last frontier.

It is the only public road crossing the Arctic Circle. Eventually the Dempster will be pushed even further north to Tuktoyaktuk on the Arctic coast, making Canada the only country in the world where it is possible to drive to three oceans.

Named for Cpl. W. J. D. Dempster, who led a heroic but unsuccessful search for the RCMP Lost Patrol in 1911, the highway follows part of the route of Dempster's dog-team northeast from Dawson City through the Ogilvie and Richardson mountains to the broad, flat Mackenzie delta.

But although the Dempster is an excellent road by northern standards, the appellation highway can be misleading. Built on high beams to protect the fragile permafrost, the Dempster is a gravel road — well maintained and well graded but still gravel.

It can be tough on tires and windshields. The sharp shale on some sections can reduce a new radial to rubber shards and heavy trucks pounding along at high speed can spew a shower of stones with enough force to shatter glass.

Facilities along the highway are limited. There is only one lodge and gas station at the half-way point at Eagle River. Campers fare better. Not only are there several government campgrounds but almost anywhere along the highway is scenic enough to be the perfect site for pitching a tent.

And if the Dempster can sometimes be tough on the driver, it couldn't be better for the navigator. There are no wrong turns. Indeed there are no intersecting roads.

The highway starts near Dawson City, the old Klondike gold rush capital, where activity is again at a fever pitch because of gold's record high price. Many of Dawson's historic buildings still stand, although some lean crazily over wooden boardwalks, a testimony to the ravages of time and last year's devastating Yukon River flood.

Visitors can pan for gold on the Klondike creeks and re-create the mood of the 1898 gold rush at the painstakingly restored Palace Grande Theatre, where can-can girls highlight the Gaslight Follies.

Each day the "ghost" of Robert W. Service reads the ballads that made the Klondike famous, like The Cremation of Sam McGee and The Shooting of Dan McGrew, outside the log cabin where the bank clerk turned poet once lived.

Dawson also boasts Canada's only legal gambling casino, Diamond Tooth Gertie's.

From Dawson the Dempster plunges into wilderness. Bright red fireweed lines the road as it climbs into the Ogilvy Mountains. Moose, mountain goats, and grizzlies can often be seen along the highway and in the late summer the 100,000-head Porcupine caribou herd crosses the right-of-way on its annual migration south.

Most of the North remains "unpeopled and still," just as Service described it, and the countless lakes and rivers are a fisherman's delight. Trout and grayling abound and can be caught from the highway's many bridges.

Once through the first set of mountains, the highway drops down to the Eagle River and the first gas station in 371 kilometres. Dusty travellers can find bed and bath at the lodge but it is expensive, a reflection of the isolation and the lack of competition.

Motorists appalled by the $2-a-gallon price can't look elsewhere. The next station is a mountain range, two river crossings and 192 kilometres away.

North of the Eagle River the highway crosses the Arctic Circle, marked in true engineering spirit with a huge worn tire from one of the giant earthmovers used in the construction of the Dempster.

The Richardson Mountains follow, a mass of sharp, steep-sided peaks. In summer the sky never gets dark as the midnight sun revolves in slow circles overhead.

The summit of the pass through the Richardsons marks the Yukon-N.W.T. border and the road begins the long decline to the Mackenzie River.

The Yukon's craggy ranges and river-gouged valleys are left behind and the land flattens into the wide, pockmarked maze of channels and pools which form the delta of the mighty Mackenzie.

Just past the Peel River, where a barge pushed by a tug serves as a ferry, is the tiny Indian community of Fort Macpherson, where trapping, hunting and fishing still serve as the mainstay of life.

At the smaller Indian village of Arctic Red River, 50 kilometres ahead, another ferry crosses the Mackenzie at the confluence of the Peel.

From Arctic Red River to Invuik is only 132 kilometres across the delta. Inuvik is the opposite of most northern communities which grew around trading posts or traditional meeting places.

Built from scratch in the 1950s and '60s, Inuvik is a bustling modern business community serving the burgeoning oil and gas exploration industry in the Beaufort Sea and providing government, health, and education services to much of the Western Arctic.

The town's buildings are all constructed on stilts because of the permafrost and each structure is connected to an above-ground utilidor system carrying sewer and water services.

The population of just over 3,000 is almost evenly divided into thirds Inuit, Indian, and white — and Inuvik is the major transportation, communication and commercial centre for the area. In summer heavily laden barges arrive from the upper reaches of the Mackenzie, but with the opening of the Dempster Inuvik residents no longer are limited to re-supplying only once a year.

For the motorist Inuvik is the end of the line, although float planes and riverboats provide side trips to outlying communities and fish camps.

Getting to the Dempster can be an adventure in itself. Flights to Whitehorse are available from Edmonton, Vancouver and Winnipeg, with connections to Dawson City. Car and camper rentals are availab' in Dawson City and Whitehorse.

Motorists who elect to drive north have a 1,500-kilometre trek up the Alaska Highway from Dawson Creek, B.C., to Whitehorse and then another 525 kilometres to Dawson City.

The start of the Alaska Highway is 590 kilometres northwest of Edmonton.

It all amounts to a lot of driving and visitors should allow at least three weeks and preferably a month to make the round trip. But the spectacular scenery and unique northern hospitality bring more than 300,000 tourists to the Yukon each year and tourism officials expect the Dempster Highway will soon rival Dawson City as one of the prime attractions.

European playboy Gunther Sachs photographs Kruger Park pachyderm

S. Africa's Kruger game park

By R. BIGALKE

JOHANNESBURG — South Africa, embracing an area smaller than the province of Quebec, contains almost 200 game reserves ranging in size from 50 acres to the internationally famous Kruger National Park which covers about 19,000 square kilometers.

Kruger is not only the largest park in South Africa, but one of the biggest on the African continent, and although it is not inhabited by the huge herds of some kinds of animals that you find in East Africa, it contains more species of wildlife than any other park on earth.

In 1927 when it first opened its gates to the public, three cars with 12 people entered the park. Today the numbers are close to 400,000 a year. Visitors come from far and wide — Europe, Canada, the U.S., South America, Australia, and there are the thousands of South African devotees, many of whom make several visits a year.

There are any number of reasons for the park's popularity. It is a haven of peace and quiet for those who seek escape from the cacophony of the technological age. The rest camps are simple but comfortable, the roads good, and everywhere there is the bushveld where insects whir, birds call, animals utter, and the vegetation flourishes just as it has for countless centuries. The size of the park (an area almost as large as that of Lake Ontario) allows the visitor tremendous freedom to observe.

Among the endless variety of animals, the hoofed mammals, particularly the antelopes or buck, are most characteristic. These vary from the large easily sighted eland to the tiny, shy suni or Livingstone's antelope. The largest antelope include the waterbuck, the kudu and the blue wildebeest or bridled gnu, the last often accompanied by the beautifully triped Transvaal zebra. The impala, an agile jumper, is the most abundant of the antelopes and at present there are some 150,000 of these graceful aimals in the sanctuary.

Remarkable animals for the viewer are the African elephant, the largest terrestrial animal in the world, and the giraffe. Bull giraffe may grow to a height of 5½ metres (18 feet), making them the tallest animal on earth. Then there are the hippopotamus, the largest freshwater mammal, and the ostrich, the world's largest bird.

Other animals built on what might be called heroic proportions include the square-lipped or white rhinoceros and the black rhino. These curiously outlandish animals once became extinct in the area, but in recent years were re-introduced from elsewhere, notably from the game reserves of Natal.

There is no animal on earth, however, in which people take more interest than the lion, the largest carnivorous creature in the park and in Africa. It seems to accept the fascinated gaze of visitors with resignation and equanimity, so much so that as it strolls indolently on the side of the road close to a stationary car, it often becomes the object of a foolhardy but almost irresistible temptation to pet and stroke him. Discretion remains the better part of valor, however; this cat is a formidable beast. The wise visitor keeps his distance.

Rare glimpses may be caught of other cats such as the leopard and the cheetah. Equally rewarding is the sight of a group of Cape hunting dogs. Like wolves, these animals roam in packs. They are the nomads of the bushveld, encompassing vast distances with great rapidity and seldom remaining in one place for long except in the whelping season.

Of particular interest in the park are the birds. South Africa's avifauna comprises about 875 species.

The greater part of the park is well wooded and forms part of the Transvaal bushveld. About 300 species of trees have been identified.

Tourism returns to Haiti

By MURRAY J. BROWN

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti (UPI) — A relatively late starter in the Caribbean tourist sweepstakes, the French-speaking republic of Haiti is beginning to gain on the traditional front-runners.

Actually, its increasing popularity — an estimated 310,000 visitors spent some $55 million last year to set new records — comes as no surprise to veteran Caribbean island hoppers.

Haiti is not only one of the most colorful and exciting countries in the West Indies, it also is different. Its customs are a curious blending of African, French and West Indian cultures and traditions.

Most of its 5 million people are descendants of freed African slaves who fought and won independence from France and set up the world's first black republic in 1804. They are a polite and friendly people, with none of the rampant racism or anti-Americanism which flares now and again in other parts of the Caribbean.

Haiti is a land of startling contrasts, of soaring mountains and lush valleys, sprawling coffee and sugarcane plantations, acres of wild-growing orchids and other exotic flowers and fruit, wealth and want and voodoo drums and church bells.

Tourism dwindled to virtually zero because of political unrest and other internal problems during President Francois (Papa Doc) Duvalier's regime from 1957 to 1971. But the picture began to change after his death.

Jean Claude Duvalier moved into the presidential palace as president for life and eased some of the restrictions imposed by his father. The resumption of U.S. and other financial aid has helped improve the economy and living standards even though there still are signs of poverty — in the ragged clothes of young and old, the tumble-down shacks, the scroungers and the beggars.

Political stability has brought the big jets and cruise ships back to Haiti. Tourist facilities are being expanded and there is talk of package deals which would include visits to Haiti and the Spanish-speaking Dominican Republic which shares the island of Hispanola.

Port-au-Prince and Cap Haitien are still the primary tourist destinations although new roads are opening beaches and other areas. A new scenic highway has cut driving time in about half — to about five hours — between Port-au-Prince and Cap Haitien, gateway to the ruins of fabulous San Souci palace.

PLANNING A HOLIDAY? IT'S HARD NOT TO THINK OF THE BAY

Hearst's San Simeon castle full of art treasure

By BILLY D. EDSON

Perched majestically atop "The Enchanted Hill" and glistening in the bright sunlight, 1,600 feet above the Pacific, the castle that was home to William Randolph Hearst is but a short distance away from California's major cities.

Since 1958, when Hearst San Simeon State Historical Monument was turned over to the state by the Hearst Corp., it has attracted more than 6 million visitors.

The surrounding Hearst property is now a working cattle ranch. The family's hideaway ranch house is barely visible from the road.

Before reaching the entrance to Hearst Monument, one can take a side trip to explore the little harbor of San Simeon. Here are seen the quarters of the ranch cowboys, three large warehouses still crammed with art treasures purchased by Hearst before his death in 1951 and, surprisingly, the only parcel of land within the 50-mile front of his holdings that "W. R." was never able to purchase.

At the castle, a 15-minute drive from the monument entrance, there is a choice of three tours, each requiring about two hours.

Tour 1, is recommended for first-time visitors.

It includes much of the 123 acres of gardens, terraces and pools and wends through one of three guest houses.

It also takes in the lower level of the castle, including the refectory, where meals were served following strict rules, the assembly hall with its towering ceilings, where guests would gather to await Hearst's arrival for dinner, and the movie theater, where one was expected to enjoy whatever screen fare was offered — usually the latest first-run movies.

Tour 2 covers the upper levels of the castle, including Hearst's private suite, his private elevator and the indescribably beautiful bedrooms high up in the 137-foot "Celestial Towers." Here, also, are libraries and sitting rooms with priceless furnishings. A sturdy pair of walking shoes is advised on this tour, for you must climb 150 steps to see it all.

Part of this tour is the huge kitchen where meals for as many as 200 guests were prepared. It is so large, many of today's apartments would probably fit nicely in it.

Tour 3 is highlighted by some of the castle's finest pieces of art. It includes 36 rooms, mostly bedrooms and baths large enough to require several visits in order to see everything. One is nearly 30 feet long, another is walled with black marble shining like patent leather. All are equipped with showers, as well as bathtubs.

It is not possible, even by taking all three tours, to glimpse every quarter of that giant 100-room mansion. In fact, state workers at the site say they are frequently surprised to discover some little room or niche of which they were previously unaware.

There is enough to see in each tour, however, to part the curtain on the rich atmosphere that once permeated every inch of La Casa Grande.

The art treasures alone are enough to dazzle the imagination. Huge tapestries, paintings, sculpture, knickknacks that could have come from far across the globe, each seeming to fit exactly in its place as though the magnificent house had been designed just for the purposes of showing it off. The state guides will tell you it was so.

Hearst, above all, considered himself an art collector and his home reflects this attribute. It is said that at one time he owned at least 25 per cent of all the great art available in the world. After seeing his home, who can doubt it?

Dominican resort could be country by itself

By JERRY HULSE

SANTO DOMINGO, Dominican Republic — What's described as the "world's best-kept secret" is likely to become the Caribbean's hottest new destination.

All this may appear a trifle odd because the Dominican Republic — of which Santo Domingo is the capital — ranks as the oldest nation in the Western Hemisphere.

Princess Saroya, ex-wife of the deposed shah of Iran, spent a recent holiday at the island's peachy new resort, Casa de Campo. Happy Rockefeller was there earlier. So were Candice Bergen as well as one of the Rothschilds.

Casa de Campo, which is some 50 miles downcoast from Santo Domingo, is being hailed by Dominicans as the "greatest new resort in the Caribbean."

It's not an exaggeration. A development of Gulf and Western, Casa de Campo involves a sprinkling of 143 golf and tennis villas plus 178 hotel rooms across 7,000 acres of verdant land facing one of the island's slickest beaches.

These are one-, two- and three-bedroom villas built of native stone and topped with red corrugated roofs. Unfortunately, they're not exactly a steal. Rates during the high season run $175 (dollar figures in U.S.) to $385 a day and $85 to $200 in those off-season months, April to mid-December.

An ordinary hotel room is something else. The low bid in winter is $115 double and summer rates start at $60.

But where else in the Caribbean can one get a polo lesson from the nephew of the Majarajah of Jodhpur?

The price for a horse, mallet, helmet and balls comes to $25 along with a half hour with Jabar Singh. Join a group and you can save $10.

Still, one doesn't have to play the game to enjoy a match. Games go off on schedule every Tuesday, Wednesday and Saturday.

Casa de Campo was created for romantics as well as horse lovers, golfers and the tennis set. There are carriage rides (horse carriages with the fringe on top). Erstwhile Romeos hire them for moonlight jaunts with their Juliets. Others take sunset sails to nearby Catalina Island.

Besides the tepid Caribbean, guests bathe in 10 swimming pools at Casa de Campo. There are 40 other private ones. This isn't counting the six man-made lakes sprinkled across a couple of championship 18-hole golf courses.

The golf courses compare favorably to Pebble Beach. One laid out along the coast is called The Teeth of the Dog which tells how tough it is.

While golf balls disappear with an amazing regularity into the Caribbean, tennis buffs meet the challenge on 15 courts.

Lots at Casa de Campo are on the market for $60,000 to $100,000. You pay extra for the house. Several have spent as much as $500,000 for their digs.

Still, villas are being resold for $95,000 to $105,000. You put down 30 percent. The balance is due in 10 years.

The villas come complete with furniture, linens, silverware. The works. Among the absentee owners is Dino De Laurentiis, the Italian film magnate.

A former cattle ranch, Casa de Campo could easily secede from the nation. It has its own airport and control tower (complete with customs and immigration officers). And there's a 100-man security force. And a fire department. And four restaurants. And a dozen bars.

Besides this, Casa de Campo provides a beach club, a beauty salon, boutiques, a laundry, a car-rental agency and a children's play area.

Just to keep the grass trimmed and the jungle cut back takes the combined efforts of 80 gardeners and greenskeepers.

Night owls do a turn at La Jungla, a tropical discotheque. And there's a French country restaurant, Les Canaris, that's set up inside an old plantation house where romance gets high billing.

And just next door — in the sugar-producing village of La Romana — an ancient guest house has been turned into a small hotel. One of great charm, it faces a large sugar mill. Rooms are furnished with rattan and buildings are topped with flashy red roofs of corrugated metal.

Rates at Hotel Romana range downward from $55 double during the high season to $45 in the April-to-December off season. Seaside suites go for $60 to $85, and for an extra $20 per person the hotel provides both breakfast and dinner.

High on a hill overlooking the entire complex, a 16th Century village is being created where artisans will turn out pottery, paintings and other works. An 18-room inn is opening soon and there will be arcaded shops. Already, a couple of restaurants, La Piazzetta and Cafe del Sol, are doing business.

Wrought-iron lamps glow in the darkness and the voice of a distant river is heard in the village with its adobe walls and shuttered windows. Hollywood's greatest set designers couldn't improve on this new-ancient village with its "crumbling" chapel and cobbled plaza.

Meanwhile, Club Med is preparing its own village a few miles away at Punta Cana. And to the north other resorts are being readied at Puerto Plata with its horse-drawn carriages and ancient thoroughfares.

In the works are hotels, condominiums, shopping plazas, riding schools and a couple of Robert Trent Jones golf courses, one of which already is being played.

With the flurry of competition in the hinterlands, resort operators in Santo Domingo are waging a campaign aimed at corralling visitors in the capital. Their main obstacle is a lack of good beaches. They make up for this with a spate of swimming pools of all sizes and shapes.

Without question, the city's finest hotel is the Santo Domingo, a scattering of 220 rooms across 14 landscaped acres facing the Caribbean. Designer Oscar de la Renta's talented touch is visible throughout the hotel with its Dominican marble, wicker, hand-fired tiles, fountain and lattice-work loggias.

Visitors take the plunge in an Olympic-size swimming pool, play tennis on two all-weather courts, dine in the elegant Alcazar and pay anywhere from $45 to $60 for a single room and $50 to $65 for a double.

At the entrance to the new $25-million Plaza Dominica, visitors are greeted by a doorman in pith helmet and khakis. Rooms that face the Caribbean are priced from $34 to $64 single and $38 to $70 double. Add to this the usual 15 percent tax and service charge levied by most Dominican hotels and you come up with the realistic figure.

Sheraton is visible as well ("Learn to dance the Merengue" reads a sign in the lobby). Free rum drinks are provided on Wednesday, Spanish lessons on Thursday and movies on Sunday.

In this low season, singles go for $30 a day and doubles are available for as little as $35. This plus tax and service charge.

Most agree, though, that Santo Domingo's finest little hotel (an inn, really) is the colorful Nicolas de Ovando, its 60 rooms couched behind the walls of a 16th-Century townhouse on Calle las Damas.

This oldest country in the Western Hemisphere was discovered by Columbus and ruled as a private estate for more than 30 years by the late dictator, Generalissimo Rafael Trujillo, the so-called iron man of the Dominican Republic. His assassination in 1961 was followed by several years of civil strife, and eventually, free elections.

In Fiji, natives had their enemies for supper

with
STAN DELAPLANE

SUVA, Fiji — Somewhere on the thundering reefs of Fiji, off the island of Nairai, lie the bones and anchor of the American brig, 'Eliza.'' She went down in 1808 with a cargo of Spanish 'pillar'' dollars.

Near Vanikoro, the Frenchman La Perouse drove his ships on the reefs and was lost with all hands in 1782.

The anchor of the brig, L'Aimable Josephine leans against the council house on the royal island of Bau. Her crew was eaten by the Fijians.

Captain James Cook steered clear of the Fijis after talking with the people of the Tonga group. "They fear the men of Feejee who are formidable because of the dexterity with which they use their bows and slings; but much more so, on account of the savage practice to which they are addicted of eating their enemies whom they kill in battle.''

"Oh, they ate people all right,'' said a sugar man in Suva. 'Don't try to hide it. Not ashamed of it, you know. It was the custom. Right up to when Cakobau was king.''

We were sitting in our hotel. Rain was booming on a gunmetal sea. The wind pulled at the coconut trees, the fronds rattling like blown shutters.

It was one of those days when paper matches won't light. Airmail paper feels damp as it slides into the typewriter. Carbon paper curls. And all your envelopes seal themselves automatically and forever.

A big barefoot Fijian in a white wraparound sulu brought us a couple of foaming bottles of Fiji bitter. He smiled with teeth like sugar loaves.

The sugar planter said: "I hope it won't change too much. We're on the main air route between Honolulu and Australia. They've built a couple of tourist hotels near the airport on the other side of the island.

"There are three resorts down toward the Yasawas. Grass shack affairs. We get a lot of Australians. For them, Fiji is what the Bahamas or Hawaii are to you.''

Suva is a small tropical town. Frame buildings with balconies that hang over the sidewalks. In the fall, the flame trees are massed with Chinese red blossoms. Hibiscus grow everywhere.

There are two traffic kiosks manned by Fijian police in white sulus cut with pinking shears at the bottom. A brass-buttoned, blue tunic piped with red. Their frizzy hair is worn in a large bush, as trim as if it had been cut with hedge clippers.

The sugar man said: "Not so much anymore. Some of the young chaps are cutting their hair short. It was part of the Queen's Regulations that Fijian police and the Defense Force did not have to wear uniformed caps.

"Couldn't without spoiling the hair-do.

"That bushy hair was prized by the early day chiefs. The ratus.

"Which reminds me, you writing blokes should get it straight. There was only one missionary eaten by Fijians. From the London Missionary Society, Reverend Thomas Baker.

"There was one Fijian claimed to have eaten 999 people. Kept track of them with stones. But they weren't missionaries.''

He said: "Hear that rain. That may keep the tourists out of Suva. Rains 180 inches a year on this side. The other side of the island gets the dry weather. Once we had 52 inches in two days. Two feet of water on our little local airstrip.

"The way they write, you'd think Fijians had missionaries for breakfast, lunch and high tea. But it was only Baker. And that was an accident.

"Baker had given a chief a comb. It's a village up in the mountains. Nabutautau. Baker was trying to show him how to use it and he touched the chief's frizzy hair. An absolute tabu.

"The chief's bodyguard clubbed him to death on the spot.''

"Well, they always ate people, so they put Baker on the day's bill-of-fare. They'd never seen boots before so they didn't take those off and somebody broke a tooth on a boot nail That's the story, anyway.

"Now, when a Fijian wants to put someone down as stupid, he says: 'He must be from Nabutautau.'

"Few years ago, one of the hotels put a 'cannibal sandwich' on the menu. The Government got very starchy about it. But the Fijians thought it was funny as could be.''

Community work order for theft

James David Foss was ordered in county court Friday to do 100 hours of community service work during the first year of a two-year probation.

He received a suspended sentence for theft of a boat and motor after pleading guilty to the offence which took place last Aug. 19 in Esquimalt.

Court was told the owner was James Purcell White who had been charged previously with theft of a $600 motor — the same motor alleged in the Foss case — and who was found not guilty and discharged by a county court jury on Tuesday.

Before the judge

Two brothers were charged in provincial court Friday after a Thursday night brawl outside the Halfway House beer parlor on Esquimalt Road.

Curtis Christie, 24, and Benjamin Christie, 18, of 1178 Lockley, were remanded until Thursday to set a date for a preliminary hearing into the charges which include assault causing bodily harm and possession of a dangerous weapon.

Benjamin Christie was released on his own recognizance in the sum of $500. His older brother was held in custody.

Frank Ronald Smith, 22, of 2308 Wark, received head injuries in the fight and has been released from Victoria General Hospital.

It may have only been a short trip as his lawyer argued but an Esquimalt man found out it was going to take him 10 days before it was over.

Judge Harold Alder imposed the sentence after Richard Bomford, 22, of 560 Selkirk, pleaded guilty to driving while under suspension.

He had been suspended because he had accumulated more than 80 demerit points over six years.

The court was told Bomford was only making a short trip on March 28 to pick up automotive parts needed to fix a car.

"It's rather a shame to let all that energy go to waste," mused Alder before sentencing two 17-year-old Reynolds Secondary School students who pleaded guilty to causing a disturbance by fighting on March 21.

The judge suspended sentence and gave Louis Marcoux, 10345 Erindale, and Robert Starkey, 994 Ridgeway Place, six months probation to include 50 hours community service work.

The court was told police were called to break up the fight which was being watched by 150 to 200 students.

The fight started because one let the air out of the other's bike tires.

They have since settled their differences.

When two partygoers' car ran out of gas early last Boxing Day, they first tried hitch-hiking. But then they decided to siphon gas from a parked car at a service station.

Considering the record of William Aylesworth, 22, of 236 Pandora, Alder said he thought he should know better.

Aylesworth pleaded guilty to theft and was given a suspended sentence with six months probation to include 50 hours of community service work.

The co-accused earlier received a conditional discharge and similar probation in another court.

Aussie wheat sales double

CANBERRA (Reuter) — Australia's current wheat sales to Iran are expected to be at least double those in any year in the last decade, foreign ministry officials said today.

Exports in the financial year ending in June are projected at one million metric tonnes, compared with shipments ranging from 100,000 to 400,000 tonnes a year since 1970.

Empress kitchen gets royal approval

By BRENDA DALGLISH

The Empress Hotel came through Friday's royal luncheon with flying colors.

As she left the hotel dining room, Princess Alexandra singled out manager Ted Balderson to compliment him and his chefs on the lunch which featured Salt Spring Island lamb.

Before the visit the hotel had been embarrassed when word leaked out that inadequacies in the hotel kitchen were worrying health officials who must check out establishments where royalty is planning to dine or visit.

The seemingly relaxed princess visited the Empress and several other Victoria sights and talked with children along the way.

The princess, who visited Victoria in 1961 and 1967, got the red carpet treatment at City Hall during the first stop of the day.

Mayor Bill Tindall said the princess, who seemed interested in the vines growing on the interior wall of the building, surprised him by asking for a quick tour of City Hall after she signed the guest book.

The next stop was the Empress luncheon hosted by the mayors of Victoria, Saanich, Esquimalt and Oak Bay.

She was presented with a gift and delighted guests by asking if she could open it immediately. It was a book of Fenwick Lansdowne paintings of birds.

The princess was wearing another gift, a large ivory dogwood pin, presented to her Thursday when she visited Premier Bill Bennett at the Legislative Buildings.

She then walked to the Provincial Museum, occasionally pausing to talk with people along the route.

At one point the entourage crossed an intersection against a red light. The princess turned to a woman with a child in a stroller waiting at the intersection and suggested she take advantage of the opportunity to cross too.

After a short visit at the museum she went to Bay Street Armoury.

The Princess is Colonel-in-Chief of the Canadian Scottish Regiment (Princess Mary's). Members of the regiment, including its pipe and drum corps, put on displays for her.

After attending receptions in the officers', NCOs' and junior ranks' messes she offically opened the regimental museum.

Bulletproof vest wasn't

NEW YORK (AP) — An 18-year-old Brooklyn man wounded himself critically Friday when the bulletproof vest he was wearing failed to stop a small-calibre bullet he fired at his stomach, police said.

The wounded man, Daniel Rodriquez, was listed in critical but stable condition in hospital.

Police said that when Rodriquez put his vest on, took out a handgun and fired one shot at his own belly, the bullet went through the front of the vest, through his stomach and lodged in the rear of the vest.

INFORMAL CHATS were the order of the day for Princess Alexandra, shown here talking with visitors to provincial museum.

Nurses advised to reject report

VANCOUVER (CP) — Provincial government pyschiatric and public health unit nurses have been told by union leaders to reject an industrial inquiry commission report into their contract dispute.

Jerry Miller of the Registered Nurses Association of B.C. said Friday the report states the principle that the 2,700 nurses should receive compensation equal to that of registered nurses, but some of the non-binding recommendations of Mr. Justice Henry Hutcheon do not apply that principle.

The association wanted to sit down with negotiators from the Government Employee Relations Bureau to correct some of the deficiencies in the Hutcheon report, said Miller, but the bureau has refused to meet with nurses' leaders.

The association now is taking the Hutcheon report back to the membership and Miller said union leaders have recommended the nurses reject its terms in a vote May 12.

Registered nurses have been offered a 44-per-cent salary increase in a 27-month contract and will vote next week on acceptance. The provincial psychiatric and public health nurses staged two days of selective work action last month, but agreed to work normally while Hutcheon prepared his report.

39 PERSONALS

Watchdog Richards Report # 168. Congratulations to Hubert Beyer regarding his Civic Scene column in last Thurday's Colonist page 5 referring to the proposed selling of time-share units on Sea Terrace next to the park in Victoria West. Also it appears that one alderman from Oak Bay is on the right track by stating he is not in favour of this type of housing which would become a part of a hotel complex and the five units could be owned by 60 different owners. Your City's Watchdog objected first to this housing project some time ago. Seen-in-Passing: Howard Taylor at the Victoria Public Savings Credit Union meeting with his fiance Phylis Furmston-City's Watchdog meeting an old acquaintance Moe Hutchinson. For further information regarding Municipal matters, please continue to phone 383-6259. Your City's Watchdog, C. Joe Richards or write PO Box 154. Postscript: Please support the Salvation Army Red Shield Appeal annual fund raising drive.

"NOTICE TO CARL JOE AND MARY BEATRICE CHARLIE, parents of CARL BENJAMIN JOE, born 16/04/78 take Notice that on Tuesday 13/05/80 at 9:30 a.m. in the Provincial Court of British Columbia, Family Division holden at 4110-6th Avenue, Port Alberni, B.C., the Superintendent of Child Welfare will be making an application for Temporary Wardship of your child Carl Benjamin Joe. 309 IN MEMORIAM

DUTHEL - In loving memory of a wonderful mother and grandmother, Cordelia, who passed away May 4, 1978.
To hear her voice, to see her smile,
To sit and talk to her awhile
To be together in the same old way,
Would be our dearest wish today.
But she was ours, and we loved her so.
Always remembered by Marie, Jeff and family.

LEE-Edward Steven, died a year ago, predeceased by his father, Captain J.E. Lee, beloved son of Betty Singleton and step father Philip, brother of Francis and Richard Lee.
Nothing can ever take away,
The love a heart holds dear.
Fond memories linger every day,
Remembrance keeps him dear.
Sadly missed by all his family and constantly in our thoughts.
May his soul rest in peace.

ORCHIN - In loving memory of my dear Grandmother Kathleen, who passed away May 3rd, 1966.
The face I loved is now laid low,
Her loving voice is still,
The hand so often clasped in mine,
Lies now in death's cold chill.
I often sit and think of her
When I am all alone;
For memory is the only thing
That grief can call its own.
Sadly missed by her Granddaughter, Debbie.

ORCHIN- In loving memory of Kathleen, a dear mother and grandmother who passed away May 3, 1966.
And while she lies in peaceful sleep
Her memory we shall always keep.
Ever remembered by her daughter Leslie and family.

Afghanistan hockey team ambushed, members slain

NEW DELHI (AP) — Rebels ambushed a bus carrying the Afghan national field hockey team and killed or captured several team members, a report from Kabul said today.

The team, which was to have competed in the summer Olympic Games in Moscow, was returning from competition in the central Soviet Union when the bus was attacked on a highway about 370 kilometres north of Kabul, the Afghan capital, the report said. It did not say when the attack occurred.

Independent confirmation of the report was not immediately available. Western journalists have been barred from Afghanistan.

Afghanistan now is only expected to send a wrestling team to the Moscow Games. Its soccer team, which had been slated to go, will not participate because seven of its top players recently defected to West Germany.

The source, who told of the attack on the athletes, said many of the 70 Afghans killed in anti-Soviet protests earlier this week in Kabul were schoolgirls between the ages of 12 and 17.

It said about 400 persons have been arrested, including 100 Kabul University students and instructors, and a number of Afghan troops and police who refused to crack down on the youthful demonstrators. Most of the victims were shot by Soviet troops and armed civilians, including students, who belong to President Babrak Karmal's Parcham faction of the ruling Marxist party, the source said.

The Press Trust of India reported today that Soviet troops, tanks and armored personnel carriers blocked entry to schools in Kabul and that helicopter gunships patrolled the city but that stone-throwing at Soviet occupation forces continued.

On Wednesday, thousands of youths of both sexes turned out for the burial of five of the girls killed, he said. Following their coffins through the streets, the youths shouted: "Death to the killers!", "Death to Babrak (Karmal)!" and "Death to (Soviet President Leonid) Brezhnev!"

Some schoolgirls, stunned by the killings, sat near the bodies of their dead classmates for hours, all of them weeping hysterically, he said.

U.S. crime up sharply

WASHINGTON (AP) — Crime in the United States was up eight per cent in 1979, its sharpest rise since 1975, according to preliminary data released Wednesday by the FBI.

Nationwide, the increases were higher in violent than in property crime. Violent crime was up 11 per cent from the year before, with forcible rape and robbery each up 12 per cent and murder and aggravated assault each up nine per cent.

Property crime increased eight per cent, with a 10 per cent increase in motor vehicle theft, a nine per cent rise in larceny-theft and a six per cent rise in burglary.

The eight per cent overall increase compared to a two per cent increase during 1978, a three per cent decrease during 1977 and no change during 1976. In 1975, total reported crimes jumped 9.8 per cent.

Dutch empty suburb over chemical dump

THE HAGUE (AP) — About 750 persons are being ordered out of their homes in a suburban Rotterdam housing development because its water system and grounds are contaminated with an "alarming" amount of chemical waste, authorities said today.

A municipal spokesman said the Dutch government ordered the evacuation by June 1 of the residents from 269 homes in the development in the town of Lekkerkerk. No sickness has been reported but residents have been ordered to bring in all drinking water and to refrain from using tap water.

Authorities have offered evacuees ample housing, both temporary and permanent, in the same neighborhood, he said.

As soon as the evacuation is complete, government construction teams will move in "to remove the contaminated ground, an operation that may last well into 1981," he said.

The chemicals apparently leaked from sealed casks buried in landfill on the site about 10 years ago, before the development was built. Quantities of the chemicals were discovered in drinking water last month.

It is not known who was responsible for dumping the chemical waste.

IRA killers nabbed

BELFAST (AP) — A squad of Irish Republican Army guerrillas killed a British Army undercover agent in a Belfast gun-battle Friday, then surrendered after they were trapped in an apartment by other soldiers, military officials said.

A spokesman said four gunmen of the IRA's provisional wing were captured in a 30-minute siege of the apartment above a row of shops in the city's New Lodge district.

The troops captured one of the provisionals' deadliest and heaviest weapons, a U.S.-made M-60 machine gun, along with several Armalite rifles, the guerrillas' favorite sniper weapon.

The killing raised the known death toll from 10½ years of sectarian feuding and IRA insurrection in Northern Ireland to at least 2,031. At least 36 persons have been slain this year.

Friday's operation was a major coup for the army's undercover squads, which have recently lost several men killed by provisionals.

Pacifist gets bail

LONDON (AP) — Betty Williams, a founder of the Peace People movement in Northern Ireland, was freed on bail Friday pending trial on a charge of assaulting an airport police officer.

Mrs. Williams, her arm in a sling, pleaded not guilty. She was granted unconditional bail and allowed to return home to Belfast. The trial was set for June 10.

She had spent the night in Holloway prison for women after being arrested Thursday at Heathrow Airport.

Police said only that there was an "incident" outside the gate where passengers board British Airways flights for Belfast and held her on allegations of assault and disorderly behavior.

One in six teens take cocaine

SEATTLE (UPI) — One out of every six Seattle high school students surveyed by the school district said he or she has used cocaine at least once in the past three months.

Three-fourths of the high school students said they have used alcohol at least once and one-third of those reported drinking on at least 12 occasions in the last three months.

Fifty-five percent reported using marijuana at least once. One in three had used tobacco and one out of five reported the use of stimulants.

The survey was based on answers provided anonymously by a sampling of 20 percent of the students in all Seattle high schools.

The survey results show Seattle high school students are about average in their use of alcohol and other drugs, according to national studies and the experience of school and drug expert officials in King County.

TORONTO (UPC) — A bomb threat forced about 350 employees of Safety Supply Canada into the street Friday while police searched unsuccessfully for explosives.

Pope urges monogamy in Zaire

KINSHASA (AP) — Pope John Paul celebrated mass today at the St. Pierre Church in this capital of Zaire and told the predominantly African congregation of the importance of the monogamous Christian marriage, calling it: "The most audacious and marvellous contract that has ever existed."

"In God's design the couple is monogamous," the pontiff said in a homily delivered in French and reported by Vatican Radio. "This monogamy is not Western but of Semitic origin."

"Each partner is recognized to be of equal value in the totality."

The pontiff, on the second day of his evangelical mission to Africa, took aim at polygamy, a tradition that has long survived opposition from the Roman Catholic Church.

"The tradition of the family is deeply rooted in the African soul," the pontiff said.

The church where he spoke was built 50 years ago and is the largest and oldest in Zaire's capital.

The Pope was scheduled to meeting with Zaire's bishops and a group of lepers later today.

The Polish-born Pope began his 10-day six-country tour on Friday, receiving an exuberant welcome from more than one million persons on his arrival from Rome.

Barefoot children and mothers with babies strapped to their backs pressed against police lines to get a glimpse of the Pope as he stepped off the jetliner and kissed the soil, the same gesture he has made on each of his four trips abroad since becoming Pope 17 months ago.

John Paul was greeted by a hymn-singing choir and spear-brandishing tribal dancers in plumes and leopard skins as well as by Zaire's president, Mobutu Sese Seko.

Mobutu, a baptized Roman Catholic, was at odds with the church during his campaign in the 1970s to rid Zaire of colonial influences. In recent years, however, he has led a drive for reconciliation between church and state. With a Catholic population of 11.7 million — 45 per cent of the over-all population — Zaire has more Catholics than any other African nation.

More than half of Kinshasa's two million residents crowded the 30-kilometre route from the airport into this tropical city, many waving the yellow and white flag of the Vatican and Zaire's flag of red, yellow and green.

It was the 59-year-old pontiff's first glimpse of African landscape.

Baby blackmarket broken

A 36-year-old Californian has been arrested after an investigation into an international black market baby-selling operation that used a dummy office in Vancouver to channel its operations between Europe and the U.S.

Richard Orser was arrested by Palo Alto police Friday on information that a baby was about to be delivered from Palo Alto to a Texas couple at a pre-arranged location in Vancouver.

Other arrests may follow as state and local authorities continue the investigation into the activities of an adoption group, Familie, which was initiated four months ago by the B.C. human resources ministry.

Pat Murray, deputy superintendent of child welfare in B.C., said in an interview today the group tried to lure pregnant women who didn't want abortions to Vancouver from Tunisia, Algeria, Ireland and Italy.

She said the group promised to pay all the women's expenses and provide good adoption homes for their children.

The cost to prospective buyers has been put as high as $17,500.

Murray said she didn't know if any sales had been completed.

"I think they were suffering from a lack of babies," she said. "They only had one we know of — an Indiana baby who was offered to 60 people."

She said she became aware of the group's existence nearly two years ago after ads appeared in newspapers in Ireland and Italy inviting pregnant women to come to North America to have their babies.

The ads were placed by Familie which had an office then on Hastings Street.

Murray said suspicions were raised then but there was no evidence of wrongdoing that would warrant an investigation.

In January, however, Murray said social workers at adoption agencies in Vancouver began to get phone calls from persons throughout the U.S. and Toronto inquiring about Familie.

She estimated the ministry has received 75 such inquiries.

Murray said the group advertised its services with social agencies throughout North America and ran ads in newspapers. One appeared in the Voice of Italy, published in Vancouver earlier this year.

The group's literature gave the names of Stig Hansen as director of foreign programs and Kathy Ganas as assistant director, Murray said.

It also said Familie was a licensed adoption agency in B.C.

But Murray said that was not so.

She and a human resources investigator in February went to the Familie office which had moved to Granville Street.

They found it was just a mail-forwarding address, and that the mail was sent to an address in Palo Alto. None of the staff had ever heard of Hansen or Ganas.

Murray said she wrote to Hansen requesting a meeting.

Ganas replied on March 26 saying the group was still in the process of setting up its standards and hadn't completed any adoptions. Hansen had gone to Denmark and a meeting couldn't be arranged at that time.

Murray said the investigation involved U.S. and Canadian immigration officials, the FBI and other police forces and several social services departments.

The break in the case came last week when one of the adopting parents agreed to co-operate with the authorities.

Israel hits back for ambush

HEBRON (AP) — Israel deported three Palestinian leaders to Lebanon today and blew up four houses in the occupied West Bank city of Hebron in reprisal for the ambush by Palestinian terrorists Friday in Hebron which killed five Jewish settlers and wounded 17 others

Israeli military sources said Hebron Mayor Fahad Qawasmeh, the mayor of neighboring Halhoul, Mohammed Milhem, and the religious leader of Hebron, Sheik Raji Bayud Al-Tamimi, were expelled before dawn on orders of Defence Minister Ezer Weizman.

Sources said Israeli authorities blamed the three men for stirring anti-Israeli unrest on the West Bank and had warned them in March after they criticized a government decision to move Jews back into Hebron. "It is time to show the Jews who are the real masters of Hebron," Sheik Tamimi was quoted as saying at the time.

After the deporations, soldiers demolished four houses whose owners were suspected of harboring Palestinian guerrillas, the military sources said.

In Syria, Yasser Arafat's Palestine Liberation Organization claimed responsibility for the attack carried out as the Jews were returned from Sabbath prayers Friday evening. A PLO communique published today in Damascus newspapers said the raid was a continuation of the PLO policy "of escalating the armed struggle against the Zionist enemy." Guerrilla sources said the attackers belonged to Arafat's Al Fatah branch of the PLO.

Hebron, a city of more than 38,000, was under tight curfew today, with Jeeps cruising the streets blaring warnings to the Arabs to stay home. Soldiers in full battle dress and armed with M-16 rifles patrolled the streets following one of the bloodiest West Bank attacks since Israel seized the territory 13 years ago.

RCMP officer jailed

Constable Grant Bottrell of the Sidney RCMP was sentenced in county court Friday to three months in jail for beating a man he had arrested May 1 last year.

Judge Leslie Cashman was told the 29-year-old officer, who has 10 years' service, would be discharged from the force, but this will be delayed pending an appeal.

Bottrell was found guilty by a jury March 30 of two counts of assault causing bodily harm to David Krenbrink, by hitting him with a nightstick and by kicking him after he fell to the ground, causing a head wound and breaking a cheekbone.

The assault took place outside Sidney police detachment about 4 a.m. as Krenbrink and a companion were being taken from a police car. Another member of the force and two members of Victoria city police stood by.

Judge Cashman said he found the case "one of the most difficult, if not the most difficult, case involv-

The Saanich charges included minors being in possession of liquor, supplying liquor to minors and minors unlawfully in a liquor premises.

One person was arrested for being drunk in a public place.

The squad seized 493 bottle of beer, 12 bottle of cider, and 179 ounces of spirits.

Colwood RCMP seized 393 bottle of beer, five bottles of wine and four bottles of hard liquor while breaking up parties at Esquimalt Lagoon, Thetis Lake and Mathieson Lake.

Trudeau lashes Levesque in fiery Montreal address

By MARY JANIGAN
FP News Service

MONTREAL — Gunslinger Pierre Trudeau has taken dead aim at Quebec Premier Rene Levesque with the demand that he tell voters what he will do if they defeat sovereignty-association on May 20.

In a combative and already controversial speech to the Montreal Chamber of Commerce Friday, the prime minister ridiculed Levesque's promise that if Quebecers vote Yes, a sense of "fair play" will force the federal government and the provinces to the bargaining table.

And — in his first Quebec speech in the referendum battle — he drew elaborate and provocative comparisons between the "courage" of other mass independence movements and what he called the "dead end," cowardly philosophy of the Parti Quebecois.

"Mr. Levesque and his ministers have been telling us that they know what the rest of Canada will do if Quebec votes yes — he gives answers for others," shouted Trudeau as several thousand businessmen roared in approval.

"Now we ask them to tell us what they will do if Quebec votes no. Would Mr. Levesque renounce any aim of making Quebec an independent state? Would he sit down and negotitate a renewed federalism?

"Or would he say 'heads I win — tails you lose' and in my game if you vote yes, it means yes and if you vote no, it means another referendum."

Trudeau recalled the "fiery prophets" of Quebec separation in the 1950s, the men who forced his generation and future generations to channel all their energies into turbulent debates over Quebec's future. He contrasted this spirit with the current referendum question, which merely grants a mandate to discuss sovereignty-association with the rest of Canada.

"So this is the turning point, this is the question that whirled by my generation and following generations into years of debate," he jeered.

"Well, we will not break up this country on an ambiguity... We will not break up a country which has been in the forefront of world liberty and prosperity for more than 100 years for an ambiguous mandate."

Trudeau pointed out that Levesque has promised that sovereignty will not take place without association. Then he asked the group to imagine the Irish of the 1920s or the Algerian rebels of the 1950s or the Rhodesian guerrillas of the 1970s demanding independence only in return for monetary union with Great Britain, or permission to

Levesque's reply

MONTREAL (CP) — Premier Rene Levesque said Friday he would attend a federal-provincial constitutional conference should the no forces win the May 20 Quebec referendum.

But Levesque, leader of the yes side in the referendum on sovereignty-association, added that he would not expect anything to come of such a meeting.

"We would go but we would go just to end up turning around in circles," Levesque told a news conference called to react to Prime Minister Trudeau's speech to the Chambre de Commerce de Montreal.

Convention centres a costly craze

By CAROL GOAR
FP News Service

OTTAWA — Like hoola hoops or disco dancing, the convention centre craze has hit Canada. But this is no harmless diversion — it is one of the most expensive and regionally divisive issues ever to hit a federal cabinet.

Seven major cities — Vancouver, Victoria, Edmonton, Toronto, Montreal, Ottawa and Halifax — are now holding their breath waiting to hear whether the national government will provide the multi-million-dollar assistance they need to build convention centres.

If the government helps fund even one of these shiny new meeting places, it sets a precedent of incalculable cost. A small army of mayors and reeves could converge on Ottawa, hands out and eyes gleaming.

If, on the other hand, the Liberals slam the door on their anxious supplicants, they are certain to set off a string of explosions from Halifax to Victoria.

The cities were led by the Clark government to believe federal money would be available for them. The Conservatives committed themselves last year to providing 25 per cent of the construction cost of a convention centre to every city or town which applied for a subsidy.

For the Liberals to reverse this promise now, would provoke accusations of everything from stinginess to deliberate deception from the disappointed municipalities.

All Industry Minister Herb Gray has said so far is that the Tory policy is under review.

The lobbying has reached the high-pressure stage. Barely a day goes by that some MP does not jump out of his seat in the House of Commons and demand to know when his municipality can get to work on its convention centre.

Meanwhile, impatient municipal authorities are going directly to cabinet, phoning ministers constantly to press their cases.

As the construction season gets under way in each city, the badgering becomes more strident.

The government is expected to announce a policy within weeks.

"It can't be delayed much longer," said an industry department spokesman. "It has to be high on our priority list, with the MPs and municipalities pressing us all the time for a decision."

But the official refused to

abby

Dear Abby:

A reader complained, "Although my boyfriend is very affectionate, I wonder why he never says, 'I love you.' "

You replied, "Perhaps he isn't ready to make a commitment yet." Abby, I am definitely ready to make a commitment to my girlfriend, but I, too, find it very difficult to say, "I love you."

In college, I had a Japanese roommate who said, "If a Japanese boy were to tell a girl he 'loved' her, she would become very uncomfortable and wonder what he expected of her in return. Oriental men express their affection in more subtle ways — such as doing nice things for a girl, or giving her small gifts."

He also said that when North American couples kiss in public in Japan, it causes a great deal of embarrassment and curiosity among the Japanese, who are unaccustomed to such a display of emotion in public.

I think we Westerners would do well to adopt the Oriental custom of keeping one's emotions under control.

Z.A.R.

Dear Z.A.R.:

It's true that controlling one's emotions certainly would reduce the incidence of accidents among the Occidents, as it does among the Orientals. But it will never play in Peoria — or Paris, or Palm Springs, or Passaic.

Dear Abby:

This is for the woman who admits to being 65 pounds overweight, but insists that she is "happy, popular, good-looking, well-dressed, and couldn't care less what other people think." If she really believed this, she is not being honest with herself, so how can she be honest with others?

I have yet to meet an obese person who was totally honest. Generally speaking, they cheat on diets, lie about how much they eat and what they weigh; they even lie about having a "thyroid" condition.

Men prefer feminine women, and there's nothing feminine about hippos. They can't walk ladylike, they can't sit ladylike, and God forbid they should ever have to run! And if they were to see a moving picture of themselves walking away from the camera, they would never wear tight pants in public again!

In case you think I'm a skinny person with no understanding of the fat person's pain, let me assure you that I am a former fatty who is constantly fighting the battle of the bulge.

Been There

Dear Been There:

Not all fat people fit your stereotype. Some are honest, self-confident and able to accept themselves as they are. Witness "The National Association to Aid Fat People," a newly formed organization dedicated to fighting discrimination against the obese and to assuring them that fat is fine and nothing to be ashamed of.

Dear Abby:

I am a grandmother, and as one might expect, I am placed in competition with the other grandmother. I don't believe in buying my grandchildren's love by bringing them presents ever time I go to see them. However, the other grandmother does, which is her privilege. We all live in the same city.

The grandchildren have been conditioned (by the other grandma) to expect a gift every time a grandparent visits. I really love them, but I want them to be glad to see me for myself — not for what I bring them.

I become slightly irritated when the little ones invariably come running to greet me with, "What did you bring me?" I refuse to submit to this subtle form of blackmail. Any suggestions?

No Gift Granny

Dear Granny:

Your grandchildren will soon be conditioned to expect no gifts from you. Hang in there and concentrate on cultivating their love in other ways until their values mature — as they will in time.

Plastic cup may be hazard

your health

By DR. L.L. COLEMAN

I read somewhere that drinking hot tea out of a styrene plastic cup could be dangerous. At the place where we work we drink hot soups, coffee and tea from these cups all the time. Do you think we should discontinue this?

Miss B.I.L.

Dear Miss L.:

A number of readers have written about their concern in using these cups. Apparently, the first report was a confusing one. Consequently, anxiety developed without anyone having given a real explanation of what actually was the problem.

It all started when Dr. Michael Phillips, of the University of Connecticut, wrote a letter to the prestigious New England Journal of Medicine. In it he said, "While drinking tea with lemon in the cafeteria, I noticed that the interior of the polystyrene cup was dissolving before my eyes and even perforating in places."

Dr. Phillips became concerned because a previous study had suggested that polystyrene might be cancer-forming in experimental animals. An experiment was then performed in which hot tea was poured into 16 polystyrene cups. A slice of lemon with rind was added to eight of the cups. After 15 minutes, the cups with the lemon tea showed definite erosion of the inner surface.

The manufacturer of these plastic cups quickly responded to this threat to their product. A spokesman said, "It has long been known that limonene, a substance found in lemon rind, tends to soften polystyrene. But," he continued, "the amount released in one slice of lemon is so negligible that it does not create a problem as far as the cup's integrity is concerned."

Undoubtedly, some of the polystyrene is dissolved in this erosion process. Although there is no definitive, confirmatory evidence that the dissolved polystyrene is either toxic or cancer-forming, I personally would prefer to drink my soups and tea out of a more stable container until all the ongoing studies conclusively show that no possible danger exists.

Bee mystery solved on high

EDMONTON (CP) — A secret flight Tuesday from Phoenix, Ariz., has answered many questions about the deaths of five million honey bees on another flight earlier in April.

Overheating and overcrowding were to blame for the deaths of the bees, intended for beekeepers in the Calgary and Edmonton area, said Ken Orletsky of Bee World Inc. in Phoenix.

Alberta government officials at the time told Orletsky, the shipper, a thermal accident during the flight from Phoenix resulted in the deaths.

The bees were being flown from Arizona to replenish depleted stocks. Beekeepers kill a large number of bees each fall because it is cheaper than feeding them through cold Alberta winters. It was the first time a large shipment had been sent by air.

To test the overheating theory a shipment of 60 packages of bees with 10,000 bees in each package, was flown to Calgary Tuesday, along with electronic monitoring devices.

Orletsky, in a telephone interview Wednesday from Phoenix, said a United States department of agriculture worker was on board the flight to monitor the bees.

He termed the latest flight "100-per-cent successful."

The agriculture official tested the cargo hold temperature throughout the flight and the empty hold on the return flight to Arizona, Orletsky explained.

The April 16 deaths were caused by loading the bees at high temperatures — 34 degrees Celsius — in Arizona and overcrowding in the cargo hold.

Midnight feller ravages park

EDMONTON (CP) — Hundreds of trees along the river bank were destroyed last weekend, says Mike Patton of the city's parks and recreation department.

"It's just devastating. The river valley is so beautiful and this sort of thing just drives me crazy."

Patton speculated that the culprit or culprits sawed the trees to get a better view of the river valley. Some area residents had asked the city to thin the trees so they would not obscure the view.

He said the trees included Poplars, Saskatoons and Willows along Valleyview Drive.

Eaton home sold

WINNIPEG (CP) — A Saskatchewan contractor is about to buy a stately Winnipeg home which has had such diverse owners as the Eaton retail family and a massage parlor owner.

Sale price of the six-bedroom Tudor home on Wellington Crescent along the Assiniboine River hasn't been revealed because the transfer of title isn't expected to occur until next week.

However, real estate agent Richard Wood said the house was listed for $650,000, including contents, in late 1978.

The purchaser is Lloyd Engel of Regina.

Joy is regional

CALGARY (CP) — Two books banned in Winnipeg this week have yet to raise a blush in Calgary.

Winnipeg police ordered The Joy of Gay Sex and The Joy of Lesbian Sex taken off bookstore shelves after receiving a complaint about the "earthy language" and sketches of intimate couplings contained in the books.

But in Calgary police officials say they are taking no action at this time to have the books removed from local stores.

Record dry spells

WINNIPEG (CP) — There were no April showers in most of Manitoba.

As a result, new records were established in some communities for the longest spring dry spell, a spokesman for the Winnipeg weather office said.

There was no measurable precipitation reported in Winnipeg for 34 days, eclipsing the 33-day record established in 1882.

In northern Manitoba communities, temperatures have also been soaring to new highs.
